He just the same as declares his party infallible. He says it is unchanged and unchangeable. He would have external protection. His reasoning on the cause of financial panics is strange, indeed. He says the Clay tariff compromise of 1833 caused, the financial panic of 1837 that the change in tariffs in 1846 caused the panic of 1857. Now in the first place from 1833 to 1837 it took four years to bring on a panic, in the next place it took eleven years. He takes care not to mention the panic of 1873 since he has no tariff to fit on it. But the Wilson bill made good speed with its panic. Its panic got here before the Wilson bill was framed. The bill has not become a law yet. In the winter of 1893 before the democratic administration begun the republican daily press predicted a panic; their reason was that so much gold was being shipped to Europe to pay interest on foreign capital invested in the United States. and also to pay for imported goods. That reason appeals in some degree of intelligence under our stupid financial system. But when plutocracy wished to secure another point these papers gave the opinions of such men as C. M. Depew, who said that the cause of hard times was the purchasing clause of the Sherman act. What will be the next appeal of ignorance? Under the tariff laws that the producer sells raw material at extremely low prices. Still it is an era of shams. We have to wear shabby clothes made of refuse. The food we buy is prepared the same as the clothes for the poorer classes. The workingmen have low wages and none at all in many cases. They wear the same kind of shabby material that we wear as a rule. Wm. Dean Howells reminds us that our industrial forces are largely employed in making ugly shams with which to cloth and serve the great majority of our American people while there is good material and plenty of skill to produce the best of goods. We are told there is an over production of this good material. We do not think for a moment that the McKinley bill made the hard times, or that the tariff is the cause, or that the change in the tariff will make good times. There is more than tariff the matter. These times furnish grand campaign stock for the republicans. Now the fact is the democrats have made no change except the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman act, and every republican who did not have an interest in a silver mine voted for repeal. They pretend to be afraid of free trade; the democratic administration promised them protection as soon as they got in power, notwithstanding the fact that they, the democrats, promised their constitutents tariff for revenue only. The Wilson bill was dictated by manufacturing interests just the same as the McKinley bill. There is a little changing from one industry to another. The leading democratic paper of the U. S., viz. the New York Sun says that Wilson is parading in McKinley's old clothes. Now when a man stands up before thousands of his fellow citizens and tells them that the fear of this bill that has not yet passed has caused the financial ruin begun a year ago we can not help thinking that he is making an appeal to the lowest in human nature viz., ignorance, prejudice and dishonesty. That he and his party stands by plutrocratic government is plainly shown by the attitude of railroads and the daily press. On no other occasion did thd Great Northern give unconditional half fares. The republican party can get large sums of money when ever it calls for it. There s no lack of special rates and special cars to serve them. There party news papers are well backed by money. I think most all of the large news papers are owned and controlled by corporations. The unchanged and unchangeable principle is meant to check progress in independent thought, to hold down to party prejudice and keep votes in party lines.

"This is surely an era of small fry in politics," so when stump speakers come around next fall let us be ready for them. Let us do some studying and thinking on these questions and not be led by politicians who belong to parties for office or spoils only.

FROM CALIFORNIA

Letter from Hon. B. F. Christlieb.

After a four months personal experience and from what I have learned from the experience of others. I regard Southern California as amongst the best places to be found for an all the year around place to live in as far as health and climate are concerned. Despite the boasts of their climate one must not expect to find summer weather existing here continuously even if green trees, fruit and flowers are to be seen at any time of the year. There are at least three months, a period beginning with the holidays, that, as far as a persons health and physical comfort are involved, must be treated as a season of winter at least, but still winter, in which ulsters, cloaks, gloves, and ladies furs are necessary. Ladies are to be seen basking in the sunshine on verandas during the warmer hours of the day protected with wraps and furs accompanied with parasols or umbrellas, the latter being used not only to shield off the suns rays but for protection against the ozonic chill of a California gentle breeze, both usually proceeding from the same point of compass and from the direction of the ocean during afternoons. The pleasant hours being from 10 A. M. to 1 P. M., after which the sea breeze arises and is felt many miles inland.

Regarding the matter from a wintry view it is something to be appreciated that people can be seated on a veranda and enjoy fresh air and out door comforts, even in wraps and shield off the worst breezes with umbrellas. The temperature varies and some days basking in sunshine on verandas is not practicable or enjoyable on account of a lower temperature. On the latter occasions a room with large or bay windows facing southerly are very genial places. The sunshine under any temperature existing here will warm such rooms sufficiently for comfort requiring the addition of artifical heat mornings and evenings.

The ocean breeze is supposed to be one of the healthful properties of this climate in its being charged with ozone, but one, especially the invalid must be careful of taking over doses of the ozone. Monrovia and Sierra Madre, the two places being seperated only a few miles, are regarded by physicans as being beneficial to invalids with throat and pulmonary troubles in a sojourn at either place for a considerable length of time, which is being tested by some eminent physicians who are making one or the other of these places their present abode. These places are situated at the southerly foot of the Sierra Madre mountains, opposite Wilson's peak, at a distance 40 miles from, and at an elevation of about 600 feet above the ocean. The mountains serving to shield those places from the cold inland winds from the North and at the same time retaining and reflecting the suns heat collected on their southerly slopes modifying the ocean breezes and enveloping these villages with an atmosphere supposed to be beneficial to invalids.

March was much pleasanter than January or Feburary. It being somewhat colder about St. Patricks day and the few days following than any time in march. The closing days of the month were quite warm. Temperature running as high as 80 degrees and upward.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, D. C., April 6, 1894.

Senator Harris, of Tennessee, has been by general admission, since the retirement of Ingalls, of Kansas, the disparagement of Senator Voorhees, where hard work has entitled him to a little rest, to say that the placing of the tariff bill in charge of Senator Harris mas a wise move. In addition to his parliamentary knowledge and skill, he is full of aggressiveness. He has already shocked the republicans who attempted to raise needless obstacles to prolong the tariff debate by promptly brushing them out of the way and stating firmly that no such tactics would be permitted. He proposes that the Senate shall every day at the expiration of the "morning hour" (2 o'clock p. m.) talk tariff as long as it remains in session, until a vote is reached on the bill, and he will not willingly deviate from the rule, except that it be to take up something important that demands immediate action. This will make the work of prolonging the debate beyond a reasonable time, just for the sake of delay much more arduous than the republicans have been calculating upon.

The House has once more got a voting quorum of democrats, and this week the democratic contestants whose claims had been favorably reported upon by the committee on Elections—O'Neal of Missouri, and English, of California—were given their seats, and the Bland bill settled by a vote of 144 to 114.

Representative Cooper, of Indiana, thinks a great thing for silver was accomplished when the House committee on Coinage decided to favorably report his bill providing that greenbacks shall be subject to state and municipal taxation, as coin now is. Representative Hall, of Missouri, who was designated by the committee to write the report in favor of the bill, makes an accusation against the banks which, unless proven to be erroneous, should of itself be a sufficient reason for the passage of the bill. He says: "The greenback was originally the prople's money, but of late it has become the pet of the National banks. They have kept it from circulation as its freedom from taxation made it more desirable to keep in the bank vaults than silver or gold, which are subject to taxation. The anxiety of the banks to get hold of greenbacks has been so great that a fraudulent practice has grown up. There are only $346,000,000 of greenbacks in circulation, yet official returns show that banks and individuals claim exemption on $3,000,000,000 of greenbacks. The manner of conducting this fraud is simple. A package of greenbacks is passed from bank to bank, ahead of tax assessor, and at each bank he exempts the same package of greenbacks." Mr. Cooper's bill is by no means a new idea. It has twice been passed by the Senate by a unanimous vote and has been endorsed by a number of democratic State conventions.

It would have been impossible for the Governor of Georgia to have selected another man outside of Congress to serve the unexpired time of the late Senator Colquitt who would have been as satisfactory to democrats in Congress as Hon. Patrick Walsh, who will need few introductions among democrats in Congress. It is generally expected here that Speaker Crisp will be elected for the full term beginning March 4, 1895.

Secretary Morton has from the time he took charge of the Agricultural Department made it an inviolable rule, binding upon himself and every official in his department, that there shall be no oral understandings about public matters. He requires that everything said and done shall appear in writing upon the records of the department, so that no man shall be able to even make a pretence of misunderstanding the disposal of any matter. The wisdom of the Secretary is made apparent by the publication of a story alleging a serious conflict of authority between Prof. Harrington, chief of the Weather Bureau, and Secretary Morton. There was no conflict of authority. Prof. Harrington recommended that the civil service law be extended to cover certain positions under the Civil Service Commission endorsing the recommendation. That's the whole story, open to all in the records of the department.

Senator Morgan, of Alabama, has introduced a bill providing for a reorganization of the State department, which will give all subordinates of that department, excepting the Secretary, his first assistant and Ambassadors and Ministers, a life tenure and chances for promotion according to their merits.

President Cleveland and Secretary Gresham were both pleased when the Senate passed unanimously and without amendment the Bearing Sea bill prepared by the latter to meet necessities connected with carrying out the agreement reached by the Court of Arbitration which passed upon the claims of the United States and of Great Britain, in Bering Sea. It was a double pleasure to get the bill unanimously approved and to get it passed ahead of action upon a similar bill now before the British Parliament.

Strike, From St. Paul to Seattle.

The Wilson Bill and Poultry.

One of of readers rather astonished us by hurling the following laconic letter at us. He says:

I have expected you to say something about "The Wilson Bill and Poultry."

We prefer to "keep off." The wise men seem unable to do so. We will say this, however, you cannot hit a man (nation) unless he hits back. A tariff may keep Canadian goods out of the States but Canada will also keep our goods out of her territory. It is a rule that works two ways. Strange to say, eggs have been cheaper since a tariff was put on them than ever before. We will not attempt to explain it. We simply record the fact. We do not believe in class legislation. Our class (the poultrymen) have lost a large trade of pure bred fowls that we had with Canada, for Canada at once "hit back" and keep us out.—The Poultry Keeper.

Binding Twine.

Henry Wolfer, warden of the penitentiary, at Stillwater has sent out a lot of samples of the prison made binding twine. The twine is of hemp, grown in Minnesota, Iowa and Kentucky, mostly. Mr. Wolfer says:

"This twine will be sold the present season at a price not to exceed 7 cents per pound, and lower, if necessary, to meet competition of any twine of any length and quality that may be placed on the market, said price to be finally determined by the Board of Managers June 1, 1894. All the purchasers of twine previous to that date will be entitled to the benefit of any reductions below seven cents that may be made by the Board. There need, therefor, be no hesitancy in placing orders now, as the prices will be adjusted as above indicated." Farmers who will need twine this fall, if they like the twine, will do well to place their orders in time. Call and get a sample at the GAZETTE office. We have a full ball for examination. 26tf

THE opera is just three hundred years old. Italy is its home. The first opera was "Daphne," text by Rinuccini and music by Peri. It was first produced in 1594 in Florence under the title "Opera in Musica in Style Representative." Thence the opera was carried to France and thence to Germany, where, in 1630, "Daphne" was given before the Saxon king in Dresden.

AN electric locomotive, which has for a long time past been under construction at the works of the inventor, M. Heilmann, was recently delivered to the Paris and Havre Compagnie de l'Ouest at its Paris station, and has since been submitted to every possible kind of test in railroad work. It is said to have gone through successfully, and is pronounced all that could be desired for a first-class railroad locomotive. Its greatest speed, with an average train, is 50 miles an hour. The company will probably in the near future adopt electric locomotives to supplant steam engines.

When the jointists and divists size up her 240 pounds of muscle, bone and sinew they will clean out without unnecessary delay. The town will need no police force with 240 pounds of determined woman engaged in municipal house-cleannig.

DR. BROWN-SEQUARD, who died a few days ago in Paris, was one of the most eminent physicians the century has known. His father was a Yankee sea captain. For many years he resided in this country, at one time holding a professorship in Harvard college, but eventually took up his residence in Paris, where he became the physician for the imperial family and for many of the nobility. He contributed largely to the medical literature of the time, and added much to general knowledge on medical and surgical subjects. His "elixir of life" was the sensation for two years among the fraternity.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

The Water Was Cold.

Michael Cassidy, who hails from near Rochester, attempted to commit suicide at Minneapolis by drowning, but the water was too chilly and he changed his mind when he reached the depths of the river. The attempt occurred at the foot of Twentieth avenue north, and for a time created much commotion in the vicinity. He carefully removed all his clothing and waded out into the water until it went over his head. As the icy element surged over him he regretted his rash undertaking and made a leap for air. Casting a "longing, lingering look behind," he set out for another lease of life by swimming toward the nearest boom pier in the river. He reached it more dead than alive, and hung onto the wooden abutment for dear life. People who had witnessed his struggles from the shore procured a boat and went to his rescue. When he was landed on firm ground the early bather was chilled through as in death, and he was partly unconscious. He was taken to the city hospital and cared for.

A Ten-Cent Verdict.

In the justice court at Eden Prairie, before George N. Gibbs, was tried the action of Chas. G. Hinds vs. W. H. Truesdale as receiver of the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad company, resulting in favor of the plaintiff. It appeared that Hinds, who is a prominent lawyer, attempted on Feb. 27 to purchase a ticket at Eden Prairie for Shakopee. The agent had none to sell, the fault of some high clerk who would not send tickets until the first of the month. Hinds was charged 10 cents extra on the train, hence the action for the overcharge, resulting in judgment against the receiver for 10 cents and costs.

After Coal.

A movement is on foot at Redwood Falls, by popular subscription, to drill for coal on the farm of Alfred Moon, where they have mined lignite all winter. It is now a general feeling that McKinley struck coal, but kept it quiet for speculative purposes in hopes of buying land already leased when the excitement quiets down. Many miners who have visited the place believe coal was found. The McKinleys made a contract to bore 600 feet at the rate of $2.50 a foot. Prof. Winchell said they would probably strike a pocket of first-rate bituminous coal within 10 miles of where the drilling took place.

Agricultural Society.

The executive committee of the State Agricultural society was in session at the Merchants hotel, St. Paul. Among other things it was decided to hold another farmers' institute during the state fair next fall. This will be in charge of Supt. O. C. Gregg. The Minnesota Driving club was allowed to transfer its privileges in the tracks of the association for the first week in July to the Twin City Jockey club on certain conditions. Second Vice President A. P. Hendrickson presented his resignation owing to the pressure of business engagements.

Minnesota Building Material.

Letters have been received from Maj. J. W. Riley, commanding the ordnance department of the Watertown arsenal in Massachusetts, asking that Minnesota building material be forwarded for the purpose of making tests, etc. These tests are for the purpose of getting an adequate idea of the resources of the various states in the matter of building materials, and to gain statistics regarding the strength of the material furnished from each state. All tests are carried on at the government expense.

The New Capitol.

The negotiations for the site of the new state capitol in St. Paul are about completed. Two of the deeds of the land purchased have been filed. There are four lots, valued at $4,000, whose owners are unwilling to sell, and condemnation proceedings will be brought against them. A meeting of the commission is scheduled for April 20. The material to be used in the building of the capitol will all be the products of this state.

Brave Milwaukee Firemen Plunged Into a Seething Furnace.

They Fall with the Blazing Roof of the Davidson Theater, and Nine of Them Are Taken Out Dead — A Thrilling Rescue.

BRAVE MEN PERISH.

MILWAUKEE, April 11.—Nine firemen met a horrible death in a fire which destroyed the Davidson theater on Third street between 4 and 5 a. m. Monday. The big stone building, which contained the finest playhouse in the city and the Davidson hotel, was burned to the ground in the midst of a blinding storm of rain and sleet, and in the final crash of falling roof and walls several companies of the fire brigade were thrown from the top story into the pit of the flaming furnace. The disaster is one of the most frightful that has befallen the city since the Newhall house burned down, when scores of lives were lost. The Davidson block was one of the most imposing in Milwaukee and the pecuniary loss of the fire is estimated at between $300,000 and $350,000.

The following is a list of the dead:

Third Assistant Chief August Janssen, 265 Eighth street; Frank McGurk, lieutenant truck company No. 4 and acting captain No. 14, 397 Park street; Fred Kroessehmuer, pipeman chemical company No. 2; Capt. Archie Campbell, of the fireboat Foley, 71 Twenty-seventh street; Allie Ries, company No. 3, killed by a falling ladder; James C. Freeman, lieutenant company No. 4; Frank Winne, chemical No. 4, found in balcony of theater; Thomas Morgan, engine company No. 1; John Farrell, chemical No. 2.

Seven of the injured firemen were taken to the Emergency hospital and a number of others were removed to their homes.

Shortly after 5 o'clock, when the fire was seemingly under control, the theater roof, on which a score or more firemen stood as they fought the flames, went down, and the brave men were carried with it to the floor of the auditorium below. Some were extricated from the furnace of flames, in which the whole interior was now enveloped, by their brave and more fortunate comrades, who risked their lives to drag out the prostrate forms of the dead and injured men. Six or eight men were soon brought out, and those who were able to speak said there were ten or more in the ruins, where living death awaited them. For these poor fellows there was no chance. The burning roof had fallen on them, and they were roasted to death, if they had not been killed outright in that terrible plunge from the roof.

The most thrilling experience of all was that of John Crowley. For several hours he was pinned beneath the ruins, suffering bodily torture, but brave and self-possessed all the while. From 9:30 o'clock until 12:15 his comrades worked to liberate him. It was known that he had been buried, but the firemen thought he must be dead or unconscious until one of the men heard a faint sound Putting his ear down he listened and then shouted: "Who's down there?"

"This is John Crowley," came the faint reply. "I'm alive, but for God's sake don't drown me. There are two men dead beside me, and Tom Morgan of No. 1 is one of them."

A cloud of hot smoke drove the men back, and, flames bursting forth, it was necessary to pour in more water. The faint cries of Crowley could be heard.

"For God's sake kill me in some other way than by drowning. I can't stand all that water. I'm lying on my back."

But the fire was soon put out and fifty men, a special detail ordered by Chief Foley, set to work to rescue the brave fellow. Crowley grew weaker and the men heard him say he could not last much longer. Then came a most dramatic incident. William Crowley, a brother, appeared with Father Haven, a Catholic priest. The father bent down and spoke to the imprisoned man. In reply Crowley said that the water was nearly over his head and fast rising, and asked that the last sacrament of the church be given him, and there, amid the steaming ruins, the dense smoke and the charred timbers, the priest administered the last sacrament, and fifty men stood around with their helmets off, all brothers, all comrades, Catholic and non-Catholic.

The work of rescue was pushed by details of ten men working in five-minute shifts, and they fought the stubborn timbers and beams like mad men. At 11:30 o'clock Crowley's head was free, and a shout went up that shook the tottering side walls. Shortly after his right leg was freed, but it looked as if nothing could save the other limb.

But the firemen kept at work and inside of an hour the man was pulled out. He was perfectly limp and his face wore a distorted look, showing plainly the terrible agony he had gone through. As he was placed on the stretcher he opened his eyes and endeavored to smile to his companions, but the effort was too much and his head sank back. He was conscious, but he was unable to utter a sound.

He was placed in the ambulance and taken directly to the Emergency hospital. When Crowley was carried into the Emergency hospital his pulse had almost ceased beating. Dr. Fox, assisted by Miss Jackson, the matron of the hospital, worked over him an hour before he returned to consciousness. His pulse gradually quickened and at 3 o'clock was quite strong. Dr. Fox say Crowley is suffering from the shock to his nervous system, but with good care will recover.

THE COAST DEFENSES.

Proposed Plans for the Protection of New York From Hostile Invasion.

Several years ago, when an unpleasantness arose between this country and England over the Newfoundland fisheries, it was claimed by certain of our officers that one of John Bull's battle-ships could anchor off Coney Island, out of sight of the soldiers at Fort Hamilton, and with her long-range guns bombard New York city into ruins. This statement sent a thrill of alarm through the country and awakened the people from their false dream of security to realize that the seaboard cities were at the mercy of any powerful foe who might invade them from the water. Immediately measures were adopted to so fortify the approaches to our harbors that a hostile fleet would find the gauntlet too hazardous to run.

Did our authorities at Washington decide upon building forts of unusual thickness of wall, with the expectation of resisting the masses of metal that might be hurled against them? By no means; because it was known that a modern projectile would bore through stone and mortar as though it was so much cheese. Another point that they thought of was that the platforms, called military-tops, on the masts of war-ships, as well as the rails of those vessels, bristle with rapid-fire cannon and Gatling guns, and that such an iron and leaden deluge would be poured through the port-holes of an ordinary fort that the artillerymen would be swept away as quickly as they gathered about the guns, leaving the fleet at liberty to knock the fortification to pieces or to sail past it into the harbor to sack and fire the city.

Under these considerations it became necessary to provide a system that would insure protection to the soldiers, and give the advantage to the coast defenders.

In the proposed plan three interesting kinds of ordinance are to be used, that of a huge sixteen-inch breech-loading rifle, mounted within a revolving turret of steel built in the shape of an iron pot turned upside down, so that anything striking it may be deflected, or turned away on account of its rounded surface. The second kind of defensive weapon is that of the ten-inch breech-loading rifle, mounted on a platform below the surface of the ground and arranged so as to be raised to the level of the same by steam or hydraulic power. This platform is elevated when the piece is ready for firing, and immediately lowered out of sight after it has been discharged. The third and last device is a 15-inch dynamite gun mounted on what is known as a disappearing carriage, because as soon as it is fired it sinks from the view of those outside the fortifications. This tube, fifty feet in length, carries an awful messenger of ruin, in contact with which the mightiest iron ship that floats would be torn and mangled as though its sides were of paper and its ribs of card board. The long barrel is raised into a position for firing by counterpoise weights, and its natural recoil after being discharged throws it back again below the top of the works. —Harper's Young People.

INTERESTING DECISION.

Law of Trade Mark Established in Favor of J. R. Watkins.

The District Court of Blue Earth County, Minn., has rendered a decision in the suit of J. R. Watkins, of Winona, Minn., vs. C. F. Blake, of Mankato, Minn., to recover $2,000 for alleged violation of a trade mark.

The Court holds that Mr. Watkins has since 1868 had the exclusive right in Minnesota and elsewhere to manufacture and sell the proprietary medicine known as "Dr. Ward's Vegetable Anodyne Liniment," and that the words "Dr. Ward's" or "Ward's" are a trade-mark, when used in connection with the medicine. The Court grants a perpetual injunction, restraining the defendant, his agents and servants, from the use of the words "Dr. Ward's" or "Ward's Liniment" or "Dr. Ward's Vegetable Anodyne Liniment," or any imitation of the name or trade-mark of the plaintiff.

Mr. Watkins does not object to competition in his business, as he is willing that his medicines should stand or fall on their own merits. He does, however, object to the promiscuous use by others of the name of "Dr. Ward's," which he has made very valuable by more than twenty-five years of hard work.

In order to protect his own interests, as well as those of the patrons of Dr. Ward's Remedies, Mr. Watkins has caused to be registered in the United States Patent office at Washington, D. C., the words "Dr. Ward's" as his trade mark, and has recently incorporated his business under the name of The J. R. Watkins Medical Company, with a large capital.

THE WAGER WON

By ABRAM S. ISAACS.

THE empress had just ended her game of chess one evening at the winter palace, St. Petersburg.

"It is enough," she exclaimed, turning to her lady-in-waiting whose duty it was to supply her with a fresh pair of gloves at the beginning of every game; "I shall not play any more. I will have my revenge to-morrow, M. le Marquis."

"Your imperial majesty has had it already," replied Marquis Strogonoff, who was the popular and accomplished French ambassador. "If you could but see the deep contrition of my heart for having had the presumption to defeat you, you would find yourself amply avenged."

The young empress smiled graciously and rejoined: "Very well, but I prefer deeds to words. That is what I try to impress upon my people. Apropos, you know how we Russians pride ourselves on the strictness and alertness of our detectives, and how nothing escapes their keen vigilance. As you seem to doubt the watchfulness of my subjects, I requested that the very next case of detected smuggling be at once made known to me."

"To doubt would be treasonable, your majesty," said the marquis, with a smile. "Do let us hear the details."

"Count Lazareff has just been arrested and detained on the frontier for smuggling all kinds of contraband articles from Paris, which were most ingeniously hidden in the linings and roof of the carriage; and the emperor, to encourage the detectives, has distributed among them the heavy fine of eight hundred roubles, which the count had to pay. What do you say to that, marquis?"

"I can but say, your majesty," he answered, with a shrug of his shoulders —"I can but say how clumsy the man must have been to fail in such a simple thing."

"Simple thing!" repeated the empress, with a slight look of surprise. "I do not think you would find it so easy to deceive our inspectors."

"Will your majesty give me leave to try?" the marquis quietly asked.

"Oh no," she answered with a smile. "It would be of no use. You know that your person and property as ambassador are sacred, and therefore you would not be a fair test. I would wager, however, this diamond ring that were you to pass our frontier as a private individual, you would not succeed in smuggling in the veriest trifle without being detected."

"I accept the challenge," replied the marquis, with a graceful bow, 'and as I am shortly going to France on urgent private business, I shall avail myself of your gracious permission, return to Russia as a private individual, and subject myself and property to the most rigorous search of the custom house."

"You have accepted my challenge," the empress rejoined. "Remember, marquis, we shall have no pity on you."

Great excitement prevailed at the small frontier station on the road from Konigsberg to St. Petersburg. The officers of the custom house were on the alert, for they had received orders from headquarters that when the traveling carriage of the French ambassador should pass through that day it was to be most carefully searched and examined, and even the person of the marquis was not to be spared. Such were the emperor's orders, and unusual as they were they must be obeyed.

It was a bitterly cold day, the snow lay deep on the ground, and the custom house officers, who had been doubled in number, were congregated around the stove, warming their sheepskin-lined kaftans, and speculating on the rich prize which would undoubtedly fall into their hands.

"Count Lazareff's rubles were nothing to it! By St. Alexander, the emperor is a kind father to us," and the men stroked their long beards and gulped down bowls of hot tea. But hark! there is a faint tinkle of bells and the swift sound of horses on the crisp snow.

"Here he comes!" cried one of the men, jumping from his warm seat. The rest quickly followed, and as the ambassador's covered sledge with its four horses drew in sight it was surrounded by the band of officers.

Respectfully touching his cap, the head man accosted the marquis and apologized for the intrusion, but he had received orders to examine the carriage effects of his excellency, and must trouble him to alight while the search was being made.

The marquis, who was luxuriously reclining in the warm folds of a magnificent black-fox cloak, roused himself at the words and replied that there was no occasion to apologize.

"Alphonse," he called, as his valet came to the door of the sledge, "take care of Fidele, and see that the poor little thing does not catch cold coming out into this frosty air."

The marquis then stepped out and hastened into the custom house, followed by Alphonse, who had carefully wrapped a rug around the French poodle. The poor beast, who had been snugly seated on a pile of warm furs, evidently disliked being disturbed, for it give vent to its displeasure in a short bark.

Like eager birds of prey over a rich prize, the examiners gathered around the sledge, and began their search in the most systematic manner, ransacking every possible place of concealment. Even the cushions and linings were not spared, to the indignation of the coachman and valet, who looked on with sullen eyes, not daring to interfere, but muttering at the folly of their master in permitting such an outrage. As yet they had not discovered a single contraband article, and more eager became the search, until at last the baffled men had to abandon it.

The marquis meanwhile was warming himself at the stove, with stoical indifference, sipping hot tea and stroking Fidele's curly head. Nor was his equanimity disturbed when t proached him and intimated and his two servants must s being searched. "Very well," "Only I warn you your trouble in vain, for you will find nothi fulfill your orders by all means

Disappointed by previous failure, the men made the personal search as strict as possible, but it was without result. One of the inspectors even approached Fidele, and insisted on examining the rug with which the dog was covered, as it might contain something hidden in its folds. Fidele gave a low growl at being thus disturbed, and its master took it up gently, and said: "Poor Fidele is not accustomed to be treated roughly. Well, you have found nothing. I told you so. And now I suppose we may proceed on our journey."

The chief examiner, bowing low, assured his excellency that he would not be further detained, and he was soon in his sledge once more, carrying his pet dog in his arms. The horses pawed impatiently, and the merry bells began to tinkle a chime of departure. In a moment the swift sledge was out of sight, leaving the disappointed customs officers bewailing their ill luck.

It was again a brilliant evening scene at the winter palace. The young empress was surrounded by her court circle, and, when the ambassador approached, not a little curiosity was aroused as to the result of the wager. It had become a lively topic of speculation since his departure, and bets had been high on both sides. Even the emperor, who generally kept aloof from such trifles, was amused at the incident, and was curious to know how the marquis would explain the affair, as the baffled search at the frontier had been promptly communicated to St. Petersburg. The empress felt triumphant, and naturally concluded that the ambassador, rather than risk a failure, had given up the idea altogether.

"Welcome back to St. Petersburg," she exclaimed, graciously extending her imperial hand, and smiling as he bent down over it. "What news from Paris? I fear you did not find anything there worth smuggling, if I may trust the report of my officers, who seem to have treated you most unmercifully, and searched every possible corner."

"Your majesty certainly has no occasion to find fault with your faithful subjects, for I can bear witness to the keenness of their eyes and fingers," the marquis replied, with a slightly amused smile at the eager looks of the circle of auditors. "But still, I did bring back a trifle, which perhaps you will allow me to show you. My valet is in the anteroom, as I could not well intrust it to other hands, and perhaps your majesty will give permission for him to enter here."

With an incredulous look, which was reflected on the faces of her court, the empress gave the required order, and as Alphonse entered with Fidele in his arms she could not suppress a laugh, in which her whole circle joined.

"What a pretty little dog!" she exclaimed. "But it scarcely comes under the head of contraband, and if this is the only thing you have brought from Paris I am afraid you have lost your wager and my diamond ring is safe."

"NOW, FIDELE, MAKE YOUR BOW."

The marquis did not look disconcerted, but taking Fidele from the arms of Alphonse, he placed it on the ground.

"Now, Fidele, good dog, make your bow to her majesty," and in the most absurd way the dog kept nodding its head several times in succession.

"Now, Fidele, die," said the marquis, putting his hand on the dog's curly head. Fidele wagged his tail, gave a hoarse bark, and in another moment, to the surprise and horror of the assemblage, its head rolled on the carpet.

There was an involuntary scream from the ladies, and even the empress cried out: "Oh! what is that?" as the marquis, bending down over the headless body of Fidele, quietly drew forth from the opening at the neck a long white roll of lace. Unfolding it carefully, he held up to the astonished gaze of those present an exquisite dress of the far-famed Chantilly lace, so finely wrought as to be almost priceless. A murmur of admiration was heard from all. Gracefully kneeling before the empress, the marquis presented the lace.

"Will your majesty pardon my presumption and kindly deign to accept this souvenir from Paris?"

"How very beautiful it is!" the empress exclaimed, taking the delicate fabric in her hand. "It is truly a magnificent souvenir. Rise, M. de Marquis; you have indeed fulfilled your word and fairly won the wager. I herewith acknowledge myself defeated," she added, playfully; and, taking the diamond ring from her finger, she placed it in the ambassador's hand.

"I will not part with it but with my life," was the gallant Frenchman's answer, as he rose to his feet and put the ring on his finger.

"This is indeed a wonderful dog," said the empress, turning to Fidele. "I certainly never saw anything more true to life, and I must give you credit for the clever way in which you eluded the vigilance of my officers."

Fidele now became an object of great interest, and its head being replaced, it had to go through its various accomplishments of barking, nodding its head and wagging its tail, all of which, owing to the ingenious mechanism concealed in its head, it performed to perfection. It was not surprising that it had escaped detection at the custom house.—Harper's Bazar.

'Round Too Much.

Pale with suppressed indignation Algernon McStab uncrossed his legs, rose stiffly, and turned up his coat collar.

"Glycerine McCurdy," he howled, "you have seen fit to sneer at me. You have accused me of having a wheel in my head. If I have, false beauty, it is least a wheel that has run true to it."

Ah, yes," replied the young woman, h a pensive, far-away look in her lful eyes, "and yet I hardly want for a hub, you know!"—Chicago bune.

PROTECTION'S OWN PANIC.

McKinleyism the Cause of American Industrial Depression.

The certain effect of all such protective tariff legislation as that which bears the name of McKinley is to overstimulate some industries and presently to weaken all. Favored enterprises have a feverish and unhealthy activity, soon followed by overproduction and collapse. The victimized occupations may not immediately feel the drain to which they have been subjected, but eventually their vigor must decline. All protective legislation does violence to normal conditions and sooner or later the evil effects of the injustice will show themselves.

In the case of the monopoly legislation of 1890 the inevitable break down came sooner than was expected because the far-reaching iniquity of that corrupt betrayal of popular rights by favored interests was not at first fully comprehended. It was known that the tariff law was drawn by the men who contributed the great corruption fund of 1888. It was known that the plunder to be secured by its authors was mainly gathered in the first year or two of its operation. It was seen that unhealthy activity had been followed by lassitude and weakness and that the old familiar results of stimulation were everywhere manifest. All of these symptoms were common enough, for they had characterized every advance that the protectionists had made toward a prohibitory tariff. If in some places the results in the way of overproduction and prostration were more noticeable than usual it was because the McKinley tariff had outstripped all others in its unfairness and its violence.

But a more serious malady was in the blood. Overproduction was local and sporadic, an occasional manifestation of an unhealthy system. The disease that fastened itself upon American industry as soon as the McKinley legislation went into effect was constitutional. The commercial and business life of the nation had been poisoned at its source, and the taint had reached the minutest vein of the body.

Protectionism had long corrupted the industry, the politics and the commerce of the republic, but it had not until then vitiated its finances. It had debauched the ballot box and degraded American labor; it had demoralized production and debilitated the national character, but until the summer of 1890 it had not ventured to extend its immorality to the domain of the national credit. It had looted the treasury in the interest of high taxes, but until then it had not cast doubt upon the stability of the treasury. It had oppressed the nation, but until then it had spared the nation's honor.

In its last grand orgie, drunk with power, delirious over the prospect of immeasurable gains, it had made common cause with the mine owners of the west who bargained the votes of their representatives in congress to protectionism in return for protectionism's favor to them. The passage of the so-called Sherman silver law was protectionism's bribe to the silver states, and was so understood on both sides. Binding the government to buy forty-five hundred ounces of silver bullion per month, which it had no use for, and to issue thereon paper certificates which were redeemable in gold, protectionism fastened upon the treasury a task which it could not perform. It struck a blow at the national honor which did not escape the notice of intelligent men here and abroad.

How long could the treasury pay gold for silver? How long, with its revenues reduced and its expenditures increased, could it pay at all? These were the questions, unanswered for a time, which preceded and led up to the panic of 1893. They were asked in America and in Europe long before the democratic success of 1892. They circulated on the breath of suspicion in every money center of the world, in every nook and corner of the earth where capital existed and where investments were made.

How long could the United States treasury, committed to the policy by protectionism's bargain with the mine owners, pay gold and receive silver? When it ceased to pay gold and came to the silver standard under which a coin worth sixty cents would pass for a dollar, what about investments? The answer that these questions were to receive was foreshadowed long before President Harrison, who signed the McKinley law and the Sherman law, left the white house.

Foreign investments in America were withdrawn. American securities came home. Gold contracts became the rage. Promises to pay were more and more coupled with the condition that, as gold had been received, gold should be paid. Prudent men began to put their houses in order, for all signs were portentous of an approaching storm. Small investors and depositors took alarm.

If it was good for the rich man to hoard his money it was good for the poor man to do the same. Certain tricks practiced by Secretary Foster in the bookkeeping of the treasury were not lost upon the people. By transferring this account or that, by postponing one payment and another, national bankruptcy was averted from day to day, but the silver purchases continued and the amount of paper and silver depending for redemption upon one hundred million dollars of gold became so large that at length a panic seized upon the people. The banks were raided, as the treasury itself might have been, and it was not until the Sherman silver purchase law, the McKinley law's twin measure, was repealed that the alarm was stayed.

The Sherman law bribery of the silver states, with the resulting panic and the protracted depression, was protectionism's crowning offense against the American people. It was protectionism's confession of ignorance on every question of finance and economy. It was protectionism's testimony to its own reckless indifference to the rights, the welfare of others. It proved that to save itself or to promote its own interests protectionism would stop at nothing—financial panics, national bankruptcy, industrial lockouts, civil war. Is it not time to divorce the government of the United States from such a partner?—Chicago Herald.

DEMOCRATIC REFORM.

One Case in Which Protection Failed to Protect.

Carnegie, Frick & Co., of the Homestead mills, have been compelled to pay the government one hundred and forty thousand dollars for their failure to make armor plates conforming to the specifications of their contract with the government and equal to the highest tests imposed upon them by the naval authorities. The Homestead company resisted the payment of the money until all opportunities of resistance were exhausted, but was finally compelled to make good the government's losses and redeem the obligations it had entered into at the time the contract was made.

It was not for tariff protection that Carnegie and Frick made their great contributions to the republican campaign fund in 1892. They had then as much tariff protection as Mr. Carnegie had asked for when he filled out the blanks in the steel and iron schedules of the McKinley bill.

It was protection of another sort they were after then. With a Carnegie secretary of the navy in Mr. Cleveland's cabinet, the imperfect armor would have passed inspection, and instead of paying out one hundred and forty thousand dollars for failure in specific performance Carnegie and Frick would have been thousands of dollars ahead.

They will have no sympathy in their losses. The country will believe them guilty of contemplated fraud, and democrats particularly will feel a keen satisfaction in the fact that it is a democratic administration which has brought them to book. It is time for Mr. Carnegie to write another work on "Triumphant Democracy."—St. Louis Republic.

——The workingmen are asking why they are still hungry with the McKinley bill in full force.—Detroit Free Press.

——No other act of President Cleveland's administration commends him to the good opinion of so many people as the attempt to reduce the number of fraudulent pensions. Let Commissioner Lochren go on! The looters are against him, but the people are with him.—N. Y. World.

——It was somewhat superfluous for the republican platform of Rhode Island to class the punishment of McKaneism among the party triumphs, considering that the prosecution was instituted by democrats, conducted by democrats and the offender sentenced by a democratic judge.—Boston Herald.

——The call for a convention of the republican leagues has a familiar sound, especially in the dogmatic declaration as to what "the people," have to do. "The people" will be heard from in due time; and the leagues will probably find that they know their own mind and business much better than the leagues do.—Detroit Free Press.

——A reduction of wages has just been made in the iron works of Cooper, Hewitt & Co., at Trenton, N. J. Mr. Hewitt, one of the proprietors, says in explanation that the reduction was made on account of losses suffered through the business depression, clearly traceable, he declares, to the McKinley bill. "The country could stand almost anything except a McKinley bill," he adds. "Ever since the bill was passed wages have decreased."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

HE ORDERED "FOACHED AIGS."

How a Man With a Hare Lip Got in Trouble With a Waiter.

The man with the hare lip was hungry. He went into a State street restaurant and at once got into trouble with the waiter because of his inability to pronounce the letter "p." He studied the coffee-stained bill of fare and then said:

"I want four foached aigs."

When the waiter returned he deposited before the guest four slices of pork. The hare-lipped man looked at the meat, then at the waiter.

"I didn't order that," he said.

"Dat's what yo' ohdahed, sah," replied the darky. "Yo' sayd yo' wanted fo' po'k steaks."

"No, I didn't order four fork steaks; I ordered four foached aigs."

"Well, what yo' kicken about? Dere's your fo' po'k steaks."

The hungry man first made sure that the Senegambian was not guying him, and then said:

"See here, my friend, I don't suppose you ever lived on a farm."

The waiter said he hadn't and the colloquy proceeded by the following circuitous route, in order to avoid the lingual rock on which the hungry man's gastronomic hope had been wrecked at the outset:

"Well, you know what a rooster is?"

"Yes, sah; saw one on Souf Watah street once."

"You know what a rooster's wife is?"

"Dey youster call 'em hens."

"You know what a rooster's wife's children are?"

"Chickums."

"You know what a rooster's wife's children afore they're hatched are?"

"Aigs."

"Well!! I—want—four—rooster's—wife's — children — afore — they're — hatched—foached."—Chicago Post.

PIES AND PUDDINGS.

Some Timely Suggestions for Simple, Wholesome, Easily Made Desserts.

It is a great waste of time, and frequently of money, for the woman who does her own work, or has only the help of one servant, to indulge in elaborate desserts. Some sort of dessert is necessary after every dinner. It is the proper course to "linger over." Lingering over cold roast and chilly vegetables would lack the charm which attaches to dallying with dessert. But because desserts are graceful and necessary for the dainty finishing of a dinner is no reason why the cook or the mother should spend hours every day in stoning raisins and similar occupations.

A jar of preserved ginger is comparatively inexpensive, and from it may come many desserts for a family of ordinary size. With delicate biscuit and a cup of coffee it forms a delicious ending for the evening meal. Fruit and nuts are quite as cheap, and much more wholesome than pies and puddings. Half a dozen oranges for 15 cent will make a better dessert for six people than one pie costing 18 cents. Apples polished and attractively arranged might often be substituted for puddings and sauces.

Boiled custard is a very easily prepared dish, and when poured over cake which is beginning to grow hard makes a delicate dessert. Crackers and cheese may be served with the coffee instead of the regular dessert, and are quite as much as most people care for who have eaten a substantial dinner. Figs and dates are moderate in price, easily arranged, and wholesome. In fact, by a little fore-thought, a housekeeper should be able to furnish desserts for five days out of every seven without recourse to the cook-book or the stove.—N. Y. World.

A Vital Question.

Have you ever stopped to think how much depends upon the blood? Does not everything in our physical nature come from it? Even our bones, nails, hair and teeth are made by it. The vital question is then, "Is my blood pure?" What are the signs of pure blood? A perfectly normal condition of all parts of the body, and a smooth, healthy skin. What are the indications of bad blood? Alas! they are many; an unhealthy skin, boils, pimples, indigestion, rheumatism, erysipelas, scrofula, general debility, etc. Why suffer such ills as these, when they can be cured or avoided by using Dr. Ward's Gen-De-Can-Dra for the Blood? This is a scientific preparation expressly for the Blood, and is manufactured only by The J. R. Watkins Medical Company, Props. Dr. Ward's Remedies, Winona, Minn. If you can't get Dr. Ward's Gen-De-Can-Dra from your druggist, the manufacturers will send it to you by express prepaid, to any part of the United States, upon receipt of price, $1.00 per bottle; 3 bottles for $2.50. ### Deafness Cannot be Cured by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

The subject of the above portrait is a prominent and much respected citizen, Mr. Robert Manson, of West Rye, N. H. Where Mr. Manson is known "his word is as good as his bond." In a recent letter to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Chief Consulting Physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., Mr. Manson says:

"Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are the best pills I ever took for the liver. All my friends say they do them the most good."

This opinion is shared by every one who once tries these tiny, little, sugar-coated pills, which are to be found in all medicine stores. The U. S. Inspector of Immigration at Buffalo, N. Y., writes of them as follows:

"From early childhood I have suffered from a sluggish liver, with all the disorders accompanying such a condition. Doctors' prescriptions and patent medicines I have used in abundance; they only afforded temporary relief. I was recommended to try Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. I did so, taking two at night and one after dinner every day for two weeks. I have reduced the dose to one 'Pellet' every day for two months. I have in six months increased in solid flesh twenty-two pounds. I am in better health than I have been since childhood. Drowsiness and unpleasant feelings after meals have completely disappeared."

John A. W. Berry

Assist nature a little now and then with a gentle laxative, or, if need be, with a more searching and cleansing cathartic, thereby removing offending matter from the stomach and bowels, and toning up and invigorating the liver and quickening its tardy action, and you thereby remove the cause of a multitude of distressing diseases, such as headaches, indigestion, biliousness, skin diseases, boils, carbuncles, piles, fevers and maladies too numerous to mention.

If people would pay more attention to properly regulating the action of their bowels, they would have less frequent occasion to call for their doctors' services to subdue attacks of dangerous diseases.

That, of all known agents to accomplish this purpose, Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are unequaled, is proven by the fact that once used, they are always in favor. Their secondary effect is to keep the bowels open and regular, not to further constipate, as is the case with other pills. Hence, their great popularity with sufferers from habitual constipation, piles, and indigestion.

The "Pleasant Pellets" are far more effective in arousing the liver to action than "blue pills," calomel, or other mercurial preparations, and have the further merit of being purely vegetable and perfectly harmless in any condition of the system; no particular care is required while using them.

Composed of the choicest, concentrated vegetable extracts, their cost is much more than is that of other pills found in the market, yet from forty to forty-four "Pellets" are put up in each sealed glass vial, as sold through druggists, and can be had at the price of the more ordinary and cheaper made pills.

Dr. Pierce prides himself on having been first to introduce a Little Liver Pill to the American people. Many have imitated them, but none have approached his "Pleasant Pellets" in excellence.

For all laxative and cathartic purposes the "Pleasant Pellets" are infinitely superior to all "mineral waters," sedlitz powders, "salts," castor oil, fruit syrups (so-called), laxative "teas," and the many other purgative compounds sold in various forms.

Put up in glass vials, sealed, therefore always fresh and reliable. One little "Pellet" is laxative, two gently cathartic.

As a "dinner pill," to promote digestion, take one each day after dinner. To relieve distress from over-eating, nothing equals them. They are tiny, sugar-coated, anti-bilious granules, scarcely larger than mustard seeds. Every child wants them.

Then, after they are taken, instead of disturbing and shocking the system, they act in a mild, and natural way. There is no reaction afterward. Their help lasts.

Accept no substitute recommended to be "just as good." They may be better for the dealer, because of paying him a better profit, but he is not the one who needs help.

--The five o'clock tea at Mrs. Mulford's, last evening, was well attended.

—Rev. J. W. Powell will preach at M. E. church at 10:30 a. m. and at 7:30 p. m. on Sunday.

—$1.30 cash will pay for the St. Paul Weekly Globe, and the BUFFALO GAZETTE for one year.

—We are in receipt of two volumes Labor reports and a fine map of the United States from Washington this week.

—Major Baldwin is sowing Democratic seeds with a lavish hand in these parts. He evidently believes in plenty of heads, if half of them are cabbage heads.

—We acknowledge the receipt of a polite invitation to attend the Commencement Exercises of the Minneapolis College of Physicians and Surgeons and the Minnesota College of Pharmacy this week, and are sorry we could not attend.

—We claim to be the best prepared, in the way of maps, to answer Geographical questions of any man in the county. The latest addition to our collection is a Columbus Memorial from John W. Iliff & Co., Chicago. This is something new.

—From the report of the City Council's doings at Litchfield last Monday evening we learn that a special form for application for saloon license was adopted by resolution. Hours of business fixed at from 5 a. m. to 10:30 p. m. Cards and other gaming devices are prohibited also selling to miners, pupils and intemperate persons. Saloons must be closed whenever ordered by the council. No curtains, screens, blinds or painted windows allowed, and during closing hours curtains to be up so as to give clear view of interior. License was fixed at $750. Four applications were handed in for action. Our neighbors evidently intend to know whether or not the saloon keepers break their end of the contract, or violate it daily and nightly.

--The meeting held at the city hall on Monday evening for the purpose of discussing the advisability of putting in water works and electric light, by the village was one of the largest and most enthusiastic gatherings had to discuss village matters ever held in this place. Mayor Kohler called the meeting to order; C. J. Buckley was elected secretary and C. H. Kerrick explained a fine plan, he had nailed up on the wall, for securing water from the river. Several citizens were called upon for speeches and responded pro and con. M. A. O'Hair moved that a vote be taken expressing the sense of this meeting that the Council be instructed to go on and build water works and electric lights at once. Carried. Kohler, Mealey, O'Hair, Morse and Catlin spoke in favor of the improvements. Lindsley and Coolen opposed them. Considerable difference of opinion prevailed as to plans and specifications to be adopted. It is hoped the council will take time enough to consider and provide the best.

—Paul Piotnick's new blacksmith shop is being hurried to completion.

—Street Commissioner Lanway has been looking after the repairing of sidewalks this week.

—We shall all enjoy a hearty laugh by attending the performance at the town hall this evening.

—N. K. Coffin is repairing and putting in order Mrs. A. Lyles' residence on Second street, for sale or rent.

—Two such humorous plays as Brother Bill and Me, and the Box of Monkeys have never been presented in Delano before.

—C. H. Kerrick threatens to build a fine residence in Delano this summer, and furnish it with water and electric lights from the city plants.

—Read the tariff columns on the inside of this paper, and if you did not read last week's columns hunt up your last week's GAZETTE and read them.

—A canvasser for the St. Paul Dispatch was in town this week and placed us on his exchange list. The first number arrived today and is a bright paper.

—Some of our citizens would be glad to have the saloons open up to the public gaze at all hours of the day and night as Litchfield is to have hers. There are those in town though who would oppose this.

—Our school must believe in the Darwinian theory that man was once a monkey; only they seem to think he hasn't yet gotten over it. Their tickets to the entertainment tonight read, "Box of Monkeys. Admit one."

—Parties are beginning to make inquiries about farms for sale, and farmers are placing a little higher value on their old homes than they did while they were covered with snow. Land seems bound to rise in value about here.

—Wont our citizens and visitors appreciate water works along in the hot dusty days of July and August when they can go out and attach the hose and sprinkle the streets and their lawns and gardens; and the village park?

—Our City Council having started out to imitate our neighboring city of Litchfield in the matter of light and water works, will possibly go still further toward improving matters in town by imitating her new saloon laws and regulations.

—If River stree had the gutter on the east side open so that the water could run down to Berneck's corner and thence into the sewer where it ought to people wouldn't have to wade through the mortar like mud so much. Third and other streets need the same kind of treatment.

—While driving to attend the funeral of Frank Motzko, last week, Mrs. Czock was thrown from the wagon, considerably bruising her. On Friday evening while attending the horses Mr. Czock was thrown to the ground in such a manner as to dislocate his right shoulder. Surely misfortunes do not come singly.

—Ennis Brandon, an old drive well man, who has made wells in this vicinity, says there would be no trouble in securing all the water we want for our water works by making one six-inch well, deep; and that the water will come up within 15 feet of the surface, and that the deep water is softer than that nearer the surface. Several persons who have tried river water for washing purposes claim it is too hard and has to be broken with ashes or other substances before it is fit for use.

—The Eagle in a lengthy article on electric lights and water works advocates going slow. This is all right, but she thinks next winter soon enough to issue bonds. Of course the village has no money to amount to any thing now and would have to raise some to pay for help, etc., as the work is being done most likely; unless the contractor is able to do this without having money on the job. People have voted for the plants and now they want them. If one object is to give laboring men something to do, now is the time they want their jobs; and if this generation wants these improvements they ought to have them.

Has Faith in the Principles.

INDEPENDENCE, April 7.

EDITOR GAZETTE:—It has been currently reported that I have turned Republican. I would say in all respect to the Republican party and its adherents, that I am still an Andrew Jackson and Thomas Jefferson Democrat. It would be almost treason to leave the party now while they are struggling so hard to save themselves. I do not believe in changing politics or religion every full moon as some are in the habit of doing. In fact I rather prefer the minority side, for then you are on the defence and have a better chance of learning both sides of the question. I am not so strong a partisan in politics as to swallow every thing the Democratic party shoves in my face. Most every man unless he is a fool or an idiot knows enough to have an opinion of his own if he will only cultivate the intellect God has given him. And yet it seems that some have no opinion of their own. Nothing original

I might state three reasons why I have been a democrat. First, they have always held to gold and silver as money, and that on a parity. Second, have always advocated a tariff for revenue only (and not a high protective tariff). Third, have always opposed the National banking system based upon government bonds, or the debt of the Nation.

A depreciated currency; a high protective tariff; a banking system based upon the bonded debt of the Nation, will, in time, build up an aristocratic government, reduce the masses to poverty and bring on a reign of tyranny, that kings and princes would be glad to welcome. I would say first, last and all the time, if it need be, throw partisan politics to the dogs, and do what is right between man and man, regardless of what party shall be in or what party shall be out.

DELANO TO THE FRONT!

Votes $10,000 Bonds For Building Waterworks and Electric Light Plant.

At Tuesdays election 192 votes were cast, 128 for, and 64 against issuing bonds, giving a majority of 2 to 1 in favor of making the improvements. This is the best bonus to business firms, to manufacturing establishments and to people doing business in the Twin Cities to build residences here, that our town could offer. Where people can have equal advantages in small villages away from the bustle and turmoil of larger places they will choose them for homes. When our newly voted improvements are made, which it is expected will be as soon as a satisfactory plan and arrangements can be made, our village will have to offer to those wishing to settle a good fire protection reducing insurance to the minimum rates; electric lights; good schools; church facilities; direct communication by the Great Northern railway with Minneapolis, two passenger trains each way, daily, only 28 miles ride. We expect some of the city folks will be looking us up for summer residences soon. Delano has long enjoyed the distinction of being one of the healthiest villages in the state; is well drained, the Crow River running through the village limits. Come on and help us make a city.

Catholic Abstinence Address.

The convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of the sixth District held at Darwin on March 27 adopted the following address:

"We, the delegates to the first convention of the sixth district of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of the Archdiocese of St. Paul, in convention assembled, respectfully invite the attention of our fellow-citizens, our co-religionists, and our co-workers in temperance to the following consideration: There are in this country to-day about 240,000 saloons. Not one bar in all this number is necessary; not one can give a good reason for its existence. If all of them were closed no harm would come to any worthy branch of trade. Instead all would be benefited. But each one of these places for the retail of intoxicating drink draws annually on an average not less than $5,000 from the productive industries of our land, and the spending of this awful sum of money, instead of doing good causes immeasurable physical, mental, material and moral harm to the customers of the liquors. Should not all join then in an effort to destroy such an evil, and especially should not each begin this work by pledging himself to total abstinence? We ask favorable consideration of the usefulness of the local option laws of our state, and the adoption of wise measures of every nature looking to the suppression of the drink course.

To all interested in the propagation of our Holy Faith we believe the cause of temperance offers an unequaled opportunity. No single element of evil causes so many to fall away from the Church's teaching or obstructs so many in their entrance to her blessed fold, or effects the loss of so many souls to God as does the vice which total abstinence opposes.

We exhort our fellow-workers in the total abstinance cause to continue their courageous warfare against the rum power; to keep preparing themselves by prayer and study to better conduct the fight; to combat the moderate drinkers' plan as the chief cause of the evils of intemperance, because in trying to follow the example set by the moderate drinker all the drunkards are made. We urge our members to make every effort to build up our societies and the diocesan and national unions, as the best method of advancing our cause; only thus can we secure the strength which comes from unity; in this manner can we best engender zeal and acquire knowledge on the subject. We heartily appreciate the good which has come to our movement in this district since the names of our mothers, wives and sisters have been placed on the roll of our Union, especially do we believe we have been greatly aided by the enrolling of men and women in the same society."

ARBOR DAY SONG.

What does he plant who plants a tree?
He plants a friend of sun and sky;
He plants the flag of breezes free;
The shaft of beauty, towering high;
He plants a home to heaven a nigh
For song and mother-croon of bird
In hushed and happy twilight heard—
The treble of of heaven's harmony—
These things he plants who plants a tree.
What does he plant who plants a tree?
He plants cool shade and tender rain,
And seed and bud of days to be,
And years that fade and flush again;
He plants the glory of the plain;
He plants the forest's heritage;
The harvest of a coming age;
The joy that unborn eyes shall see—
These things he plants who plants a tree.
What does he plant who plants a tree?
He plants, in sap and leaf and wood,
In love of home and loyalty
And farcast thought of civic good—
His blessing on the neighborhood
Who in the hollow of his hand
Hold all the growth of all our land—
A nation's growth from sea to sea
Stirs in his heart who plants a tree.
—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

BRAINERD people are judging from what we read in the Journal, having some experience and learning some wisdom from their experiment of voting a $100,000 of their county for the running of a saw mill, at that place; and whose smokeless stack is now a menance and a warning to enterprising people to keep away from there.

THE daily papers seem to think it strange that men on the G. N'n. have any grievance; and that their story about a reduction of wages is untrue: Some of them claim that J. J. Hill says that the wages had not been cut down. Mr. Hill's statement may be true concerning trainmen. But other employees have been complaining of a cut of 15 per cent, more or less, since August. If men do not want to work it is their privilege to stop at any time and if an employer has no work for men it is his right to ask them to take lower wages for the future when he sees fit. These things ought to be arranged satisfactorily without bringing the general public into such inconveniences.

QUITE a stir has been made in Twincite by Dean Millard's scheme to take 40 medical students to the pest house and make them acquainted with small-pox. The health officers justly claim that the risk of taking 40 students there and then allowing them to return to the University to mingle with over a thousand people, is too great. But on the other hand students of medicine can learn their calling in no better way than by clinical observation: by bedside investigation into the various diseases they are apt to meet in their professional life, at any time, without a moments warning. The students should not be made to entirely loose chance in a thousand; even if they are isolated from the outside world for a season; placed in the rooms previously prepared for them, for the requisite time after their visit. Perhaps not more than one physician in ten in Minnesota ever saw a case of small-pox, and when he happens to meet one he must diagnose it from negative rather than from positive symptoms; he must either take the risk of exposing his ignorance, and being laughed at, by calling it small-pox; or keep the case under observation until he has satisfied himself that it is not one of the many diseases beginning with similar symptoms. He must find out it is small-pox because it is something he has never seen before. A few years ago a doctor had to procure his knowledge of Anatomy and Physiology, in the best way he could, often breaking the law to do so: Now every M. D. must have his certificates for having learned these in the college. By all means see the small-pox if you have to be quarantined. The first patients you find in practice may be down with it and by being able to at once recognize the disease you may be, at once, the means of averting its spread. But take proper precautionary measures that you do not spread the present outbreak.

FARMING AT HOME.

Prof. Shaw Describes a Nicollet County Farm.

Diversified farming being a live question with many of our readers, and the fact that we have an acquaintance with Mr. Doty the subject of the following article: Jim and "us" occupying a doble seat in the old school house at St. Peter along in the early sixties: and the first house he ever owned being planned and constructed by our humble efforts; we now take great pride in saying that we knew Jim as a temperate, frugal, honest, industrious boy and young man, and are glad to, with the help of Prof. Shaw, State farmers Institute lecturer, hold him up as a model farmer for the emulation of aguriculturalists through out the state:

"Several of the farmers of Nicollet county have been giving attention to mixed husbandry for many years. Because of this they are now in a prosperous condition during these times. Their lands remain productive, and they are getting revenues from time to time of a character which the wheat-growing farmers do not receiye.

Prominent among these farmers the nane of J. H. Doty may be mentioned. He came from Tompkins county in the state of New York, and settled in Nicollet county in 1857. He has now 650 acres of farming land in one block. some of it is light in character, and this should be born in mind when estimating the result reached by Mr. Doty.

He has been engaged in mixed farming for 15 years. During all this time he has been raising grain and stock, but has raised the grain chiefly with a view to feading it to the stock. He has both raised and bought steers for feeding, finding those which he raises give him far the best results; that is to say, in the best quality of beef. The grain raised for food includes oats and barley, and to some extent rye. The calves have been raised on their dams while they have more than paid the cost of rearing. Mr. Doty is of the opinion that more money would have been realized them on skim milk. For several years past from 20 to 60 stears have been fatened on his farm every year. They have been marketed in Chicago and brought from 3 to 4½ cents a pound live weight. Mr. Doty has found out that a gaod sprinkling of pure bloods has added 1 cent per pound live weight on an average to the steers which he has fed.

Mr. Doty has also given much attention during recent years to growing pork. He feeds from 200 to 250 porkers every year. Since the era of high prices he has got more money by growing pork. He considers it safer not withstanding, to keep on growing beef along with the pork. He is firm in the conviction that endurving success in farming is obtained by carrying a line of live stock production through the ebb tide as well as over the spring tide. The chances are in his judgment, that pork will come dowm, while beef is more likely to rise than to fall.

But Mr. Doty's experience in growing tame hay is in a sense unique. He has grown from 1½ to 2 tons of native hay per year on the same land for 12 years in succession. The hay is made up of timothy and clover, and it grows on light bluff land, sandy in textire, and in some places gravelly and even stony. When this land was first seeded it grew a crop of oats. Of timothy seed six quarts of were used per acre and four quarts of clover seed. This was a very heavy seeding in timothy more than would be necessary on good strong land. Mr. Doty has not pastured this land since it was sown to grass. He has 60 acres of it and gets not less than 100 tons of it every year. The clover has failed a little insome spots where the sand is gravelly. In the other parts of the field, the clover is as good as the first.

Mr. Doty has undoubtedly hit upon a great lead for Minnesota conditions in his mode of growing tame hay. In doing so he hits upon an easy mode of sustaining fertility in land. The clover which grows from year to year brings nitrogen from the year to feed the timothy. As the field is pastured after it is mowed sufficient clover grows up and ripens to reseed the field every year.

With wise management of Mr. Doty is almost superfluous to add that he has made a good thing financially of his farming. The fertility of the surrounding cuntry is greater than it was long years ago. His returns are constant, and though they fluctuat with the fluctuations in prices, the baance is invariably on the right side at the end of the year.

William Kennedy.

I clip the following from the Rockford correspondence and local columns, respectively, of the Delano Eagle of the 12th inst:

"Bro. Kennedy (as he likes to be called) has another article in the GAZETTE again. Such stuff is enough to disgust sensible men."

"That lofty pedagogue, "Prof." Kennedy, made another break in the Buffalo Gazette of last week. He comments with apparent delight on the Breckinridge-Pollard case, though he seems to regret that some men would rather have stopped the carriage and walked back to Covington than act the part of the defendant. Of course there is no telling what Kennedy would have done under the circumstances; those claiming to know him best think he might probably have emulated Col. Breckenridge's example. Anyhow, he wouldn't have got out of the carriage."

The Rockford correspondent, as I happen to know, is a very virtuous man, and I wish to say that when I wrote my short comment on the Breckenridge-Pollard case I should have named him as one who would have gotten out of the carriage and walked back to Covington rather than yield to temptation. Nothing could tempt the Rockford correspondent to wander from the path of virtue, any more than Mr. Gutzwiller and Superintendent Lewis, and of course it must be disgusting to his saintly sensibilities to find his name omitted from the list of phenominally virtuous men who, as Mr. Gutzwiller admits, would have gotten "or "have got", as the talented editor phrases it) out of the carriage and walked back to Covington.

I am not proclaiming from the housetops what I would have done under similar circumstances.

WILLIAM KENNEDY.

McGary's Musings.

EDITOR BUFFALO GAZETTE:—Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. When? Not until we are bound hand and foot; reduced to rags and poverty; or our death knell is being sung by the whispered breezes around the colossal mansions of the rich. Politicians may cry peace and safety to the people; but there will be none untill every man, woman and child in this country has food to eat and raiment to put on. The resources of this country are too great for the people to longer doubt of their being abundance for all.

Some say the democrats are going out of business; or have been put in the hands of an assignee, to show up dividends. Since the president vetoed the Bland bill, which we think was a very wrong thing to do, at this time; but it is thought the patient may yet recover if the physician will only change the medicine. Surely at this time we are suffering from what was contracted years ago and it takes almost a regenecis to bring it back to its Eden state. The different political parties are all the time making faces at each other. One calling the other liars, robbers, thieves etc; but all this is no political reform; neither is it elevating to a republican government.

Let's see, where did we start from? If my memory serves me right, we date from July 4th, 1776. What was the foundation of this government? equal rights to all and special privileges to none, was one thing. Read the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States and you can find out the rest. You people that believe in a high protective tariff, that is protecting one industry and taxing other industries to keep them up in violation of the constitution and the political faith of the people. The Constitution declares for a tariff for revenue only. High protection incourages trusts and combines and when they have consolidated, up goes the prices and we fellows have it to pay. Now, if a high protective tariff is a benefit to any class of people in this country it is the Eastern manufacturers, they get the money out of it; send it out west, loan it to us fellows at a high rate of interest; take a mortgage on our farm, and in a few years our farm is sold out at Sheriff's sale. Must confess that I am so ignorant that I never could tell why it was so many people in the West would favor high protection, when it was taking money from them all the while. Yes those Eastern manufacturers furnish a large share of the campaign fund to the party that goes and comes at their bidding.

The praises of our National banking system has been sung for a quarter of a century, or more, but without any tune or meter. A banking system based upon the debt of the nation (Government bonds) gives to the people of this country a corporation currency for which we are paying dearly. Now, Mr Editor I think we should not have a National banking system based upon the debt of the country; issue government bonds to perfectuate this national banking business. It costs the people too much money. Let us have the money direct from the U. S. Treasurer, and save intrest on those bonds. If the government is good for the paying of the bonds with interest why is she not good for a currency without interest? Can you see the point.

Now Mr. Editor, would say first, last and all the time. I am in favor of laws and legislation that will give this country peace, prosperity and happiness; no matter whether the legislation and laws come from republican democrat or the Sandwich Islanders. This country cost to much to be made a mere play house of. But there seems to be one trouble with a large majority of the people of this country. They depend too much upon second matter. That is they believe every thing their leader tell them. And, so long as they depend upon them altogether they are sure of nothing.

In the World's broad field of battle
In the bivouac of life.
Be not like dumb driven cattle
Be a hero in the strife.
(Long Fellow)

Tom Reed, Burrows and others, in their tariff speeches in the 53rd Congress, try to make it appear that high protection is the only thing that will keep this country from spoiling. And John Sherman says free silver will ruin us. Who are we to believe? Read both sides of the question; draw a line, divide by common sense, and depend something upon your own judgement. When our homes, our reputation and free institutions are at stake let us stand by the flag and the principles laid down by our fathers. If we destroy these we are made slaves by our own hands. It is plain that party prejudice is running to high in this country. And it should no longer be tolerated. We are one people; living under the folds of the same flag, the price of which could not be enumerated. If there is a man I dislike it is he (no matter of what party) that for the sake of aggrandizement; or the emoluments of office would sacrifice the principles of his country, and I fear we have some such men who when found out should be made subjects of exile. Who has been benefited by the fifty million government bonds just issued by Secretary of the treasurer? No one only bankers and bondholders. And we are paying interest on them and the holders of the bonds pay no taxes on them. But some say "its all good enough for me." So Adam and Eve swallowed the devil's lie and doomed the whole race of man.

There are thousands of poor men that protest against the injustice that is heaped upon them and yet will march in a torch light procession and howl themselves hoarse for men that carry out the same unjust principles. These torch light fellows advertise themselves as being always present to do thy bidding. It is all the time the cry that the American workingman needs protection from the foreign laborers; then why not stop the pauper foreign Imigration coming to this country? That is the only way to remedy that. The foreign iimigration to this country in 1892 was 923,081: and in 1893 was 502,917: and you fellows that cry high protection all the time do not practice what you preach.

I do not swallow Cleveland and his whole Administration; but we had poor houses, soup houses and people asking alms long before he was President.

I know it is natural for people to hold to the traditions of their fathers, no matter if they believed in all manner of ghosts, spooks, and hobgoblins. But when a fellow like Bob Ingersoll can tell us all about the mistakes of Moses. And a few political leaders can tell us all about the tariff; the monetary system, the country and the devil, we should let the light shine in on our dark and benighted minds. People are living too fast; they do not stop to take a second thought until it is everlastingly too late. When the other fellow has got it all then his eyes are open. Then there is the Political rooster in this country who is all the time dressing his plumage (when in fact he has none) and trying to climb upon the highest perch in the roost: thinks he is the only fellow competent to look after the brood. And should these fellows fall from grace, where will the sinner and ungodly appear? Now if this administration fail us whither shall we go. We have no cities of refuge, must we become converts to heathen idolatry, or join the ranks of our opponents? For thirty years, except four, the republicans had rule of this country; made and enforced all its laws, and in 48 hours after the democrats had assumed authority the country was on the verge of ruin. (now come let us reason together) can it be possible that in so short a time after the democrats getting control, and that under the laws the republicans had made every thing should fall to pieces so soon, no doubt the democrats have done enough mean things, but that kind of doctrine you preach, no one will swallow, only he that is blind or full of prejudice. Now we are all humane and more or less selfish, so let us not blame the other fellow for every thing, and take nothing upon ourselves. Too much Pharisee doctrine about that. Therefore when thou doest alms do not sound the trumpet before thee as the hypocrites do in the Synanagogues."

INDEPENDENCE, Minn., April 4.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 13, 1894.

Senator Harris very cleverly outwitted the republican Senators this week and put an end, for the present at least, to republican fillibustering to delay the tariff debate. He made a bluff of intending to offer a resolution providing for meeting at 11 o'clock and sitting until 6 each day. This frightened the republicans and they made the proposition that for a week the Senate take up the tariff bill at one o'clock and continue its debate without roll calls or other interruptions until 5 o'clock. This was exactly doubling the time that had previously been devoted to the tariff bill and being more than the democrats expected to get without a struggle was promptly accepted. Senator Harris is perfectly willing that this agreement should continue in force for ten days or two weeks longer. Then he will begin to put on the screws in earnest, to bring the debate to an end, beginning by adding an hour a day to the sittings and continuing until they are continuous, compelling the republicans to keep a speaker on the floor at all times.

Senator Morgan is the only Senator who has publicly noticed the extraordinary address lately published as emanating from a Minnesota democratic association, referring to twelve Senators as "masked democrats" and opponents to the tariff bill. He made a personal explanation on the floor of the Senate in which he characterized that address as being like the French method of trying a man in his absence and without serving notice upon him. He expressed himself as satisfied with the tariff bill as it now stands and announced his intention to vote for it and his willingness, if necessary, to stay on the floor of the Senate several consecutive days and nights, as he had done on other occasions, to listen to republican fillibustering speeches against it. He said he had been a tariff reformer long before those who had formulated the diatribe against him, and expected to remain one until we get a fair system of tariff taxation.

The most notable feature of the caucus held by democratic members of the House this week at which resolutions endorsing the repeal of the tax on State bank currency were adopted, was the speech made by representative Cummings, of New York, in favor of the resolutions. He told the caucus that the people of New York had cast their votes for the democratic candidates with full knowledge of the contents of of the National platform, and that he was anxious and ready to redeem every plank in that platform.

It is the general impression, even among the strongest friends of repeal, that it cannot be accomplished as at present proposed. That is to say that a majority of the House will vote agaiust unconditional repeal of the law. It might be possible to pass a bill repealing the law which imposed stringent conditions upon the issue of currency by State banks. The caucus was attended by no less than one-half of the democratic membership of the House.

Senator Wolcott's resolution, which was passed by the Senate, requesting the President to open negotiations with Mexico for the purpose of obtaining the consent of that government to the coining by our Mints of standard Mexican silver dollars for export to China and other eastern countries, is generally regarded as a bit of buncombe on the part of Mr. Wolcott, intended to please the friends of silver. Few people believe that Mexico will grant such a request. If, as asserted by Mr. Wolcott, the mint capacity of Mexico isn't sufficient to supply the demand of these silver dollars in the east, the question naturally arises, why not increase it? The minting of these dollars is very profitable to Mexico and it seems little short of ridiculous to expect that the Mexicans would be willing to surrender any of the profit to a foreign nation. It would not surprise me if President Cleveland should ignore the resolution entirely, as he may very properly do in the exercise of the discretion vested in him by the Constitution.

Senator Hill's speech against the tariff bill has been the most talked about event of the week, and republican praise of it has been carried to an extent that must be nauseating to Senator Hill. Democrats, as a rule, decline to publicly discuss the speech, but the few who do, while conceding Senator Hill's personal right to talk and vote against his party's measure, are practically unanimous in expressing the belief that he has made a great mistake, and that it was aggravated by his uncalled for attack on the administration which he helped to put icto power, as well as by his slurs upon the southern democrats who have so often stood by the democratic party even when they had to pocket their own personal opinions as well as those of their constituents in order to do it.

The man does not live who has the right to doubt or cast aspersion upon the loyalty of southern men to the democratic party, and least of all Senator Hill, who has had so many good friends among southern democrats. What effect the speech will have upon the fate of the tariff bill remains to be seen.

Strike on the Great Northern Railroad.

No trains from St. Paul to the Pacific have been able to get through for a week on the G. N. An occasional train has been run for a short distance. Trains on the Breckinridge division have been as far as Atwater and return. Organizers of the railroad men are traveling about securing members for the American Railroad Union. Railroad officials are also along the road keeping an eye out for the interest of the road. Most of the men on the Breckenridge division have jumped their jobs by signing with the organizatiin. United States Marshalls have been sent out to serve papers on the leaders of the strike, and aid in protecting property. So far as heard the men have refrained from doing violence.

Superintendent Winters was arrefted at Willmar, for striking one of the men with a lantern, and fined. People along the line are tired of having no mail or other communication with the outside world, and would be glad to have the difficulties adjusted and things go on harmoniously once more.

This Mornings Globe says Marshall Bede with 30 men go to St. Cloud to day to serve papers on leaders of the strike at that place. St. Cloud seems to be the center of action for a conference to be held between opposing forces.

Binding Twine.

Henry Wolfer, warden of the penitentiary, at Stillwater has sent out a lot of samples of the prison made binding twine. The twine is of hemp, grown in Minnesota, Iowa and Kentucky, mostly. Mr. Wolfer says:

"This twine will be sold the present season at a price not to exceed 7 cents per pound, and lower, if necessary, to meet competition of any twine of any length and quality that may be placed on the market, said price to be finally determined by the Board of Managers June 1, 1894. All the purchasers of twine previous to that date will be entitled to the benefit of any reductions below seven cents that may be made by the Board. There need, therefor, be no hesitancy in placing orders now, as the prices will be adjusted as above indicated." Farmers who will need twine this fall, if they like the twine, will do well to place their orders in time. Call and get a sample at the GAZETTE office. We have a full ball for examination. 26tf

Several amendments to the rules intended to prevent filibustering were offered by Senator Hill. After a vain attempt to approve the journal the house adjourned. The new quorum counting rule would be reported immediately.

ATTACKS BY REPUBLICANS.

Shifting the Blame Due to the Blighting McKinley Act.

The effrontery of the republican leaders and organs in charging upon the democratic party—and especially upon the administration—the stringency through which we have passed and the resulting consequences to the business of the country is the most brazen thing of the kind the country has ever witnessed. If these leaders and organs had any sense of responsibility or of shame they would be doing penance in sackcloth and ashes for the sad effects of the conduct and reckless mismanagement of their party instead of trying to foist the responsibility upon the shoulders of their political opponents. For it is as clear as day to the intelligence of the world that, in so far as the troubles from which the country has been suffering and still suffers can be traced to the action of any political party, they are directly traceable to the action of the republican party.

Largely, of course, they are due to causes with which the country has had long experience—to extravagance and over-confidence in business and to the undue extension of credits which cannot with entire justice be charged to any party. But we challenge successful contradiction of the statement that the bulk of our business troubles are due directly to the extravagant expenditures of the republican party while in power and to the class legislation which bears the label of that party. That the result did not show itself until that party had been driven from power by an indignant and outraged people does not change the fact. It was clearly foreseen while the party was in power and in the main as clearly predicted; and it was because it was so seen and predicted that the party was driven from power.

That the Sherman silver law was in great part responsible for our financial troubles has been clearly, though grudgingly, admitted by the more intelligent leaders of the republican party. That the McKinley act is also responsible to a great degree is susceptible of the clearest proof. To it can be traced directly the falling off in our exportation of breadstuffs and other staples which has been so important a factor in the diminution of our trade. This was clearly foretold. The framers of the McKinley act were distinctly warned that the imposition which that act contemplated on our purchases of foreign goods meant retaliation in kind. It required no gift of prophecy to utter the warning. It was simply the voice of all experience; and the end merely confirmed the teaching of the past. Great Britain is nothing if not commercial. She buys of those to whom she can sell. Finding that she could not sell to us she bought her wheat as well as she could of Russia and the Argentine Republic, and her cotton of India, sending in exchange what she had to sell. It was not sentiment, but business. She has bought of us what she was compelled to, but she has bought no more; and the consequence has been an enormous falling off in our trade, sufficient alone to account for half of the disaster which has befallen our business interests.

The McKinley act was responsible also, very largely, for the overproduction in manufactures which has glutted our markets and brought about stagnation. It has been the result of protective tariffs from their first inception. The first effect is to unduly stimulate manufacturing and thereby competition. Then follows that falling in prices over which the short-sighted protectionist gloats as the fruits of his pet policy. The next step is the scramble to unload and this soon results in stagnation. There is nothing new in the process. It is as old as protective tariffs are.

The most absurd of the pretenses by which it is sought to justify the attack on the democratic party is that the foundation of the trouble has been dread of tariff change. It is undoubtedly true that the inaction and delay in congress has produced, and is producing a feeling of uncertainty which militates against the revival for which we are all waiting. But it is arrant nonsense to talk of the panic, so called, having been produced by anxious anticipation of tariff changes. Aside from the fact that the blighting effect of the McKinley act is abundantly sufficient to account for the mischief done, it is notorious that because of the evils it foresaw from that act the country voted overwhelmingly for those very tariff changes which it is now represented as looking forward to with gloom and foreboding.—Detroit Free Press.

POINTS AND OPINIONS.

——If being out of work proves anything, what does three million out of work under the McKinley bill prove?—N. Y. World.

——While McKinley is fighting to keep free wool out of the country, the Chinese are being smuggled into his state by squads. The major never did favor placing duty on cheap foreign labor.—Detroit Free Press.

——Gov. McKinley graciously allows that there is a big demand for Tom Reed's tariff speech in Ohio, but he doesn't explain whether it is the edition labelled, by mistake: "Speech of William L. Wilson on His Tariff Bill."—Boston Herald.

——The republicans of the senate obstruct the settlement of the tariff question in the hope that by keeping the country unsettled until November they will be able to control the next congress. This vicious policy ought to be well understood, and it will be.—N. Y. World.

——The tariff bill cannot become the law of the land before July 1. The debate in the senate is to begin the first week in April, and its discussion will last at least six weeks. It then goes to the conference committee, after which it will be submitted to both houses.—Albany Argus.

——There are just three things that are absolutely essential to the existence of the democratic party just now, and they are these: (1) That a tariff-reform bill be passed. (2) That a satisfactory tariff-reform bill be passed. (3) That a satisfactory tariff-reform bill be passed speedily.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

——Who has ever heard a protectionist give a valid reason for his belief? His reasons for believing in protection would apply equally well for belief in polygamy or plutocracy or phonography. Everything that he can see has happened under polygamy, plutocracy and phonography has happened under protection—and what has happened has had the same relationship to the one as to the other. He thinks it was protection, and not phonography, but only because he is told to think so.—N. Y. World.

PROTECTION PRODUCTS.

Republican Rule Responsible for Socialistic Demonstrations.

The Coxey movement is chiefly significant as an expression of the socialistic tendencies that have developed under republican rule and protectionist principles. In France the doctrine of protection has been accepted by the socialists in its logical consequences, and men are saying to the state: "Since protection makes prices high, give us also protection for wages. Fix a minimum scale, and let the state compel employers to observe it."

There was no principle more essentially embodied in the foundations of American liberty than the principle of individual liberty—the independence of the citizen. The state was sovereign only because he, the citizen, gave it of his own sovereignity. It was his creation; he owed nothing to the state but loyalty and obedience to necessary laws. The state owed all to him. This spirit gave the dignity and strength that characterized the men of America. In its destruction there has been no influence more potent than the doctrine of protection. In its very essence it assumes that one set of individuals is not as strong as another set of individuals, that a man isn't able to stand up before the world and win his own way through it. In practice, it has fostered the idea that one class must be made to contribute to another and far smaller class; that the government has the right to interfere in the affairs of its citizens and determine how much of one man's goods shall be given to another man. It has made the government a part of and a party to the money-getting machinery of the favored class, and has made money-getting a governmental function, leaving the minds of the citizens with no sense of their personal independence and individual responsibilities. We are no longer a nation of sovereigns, but of dependents. So paternalism drifts into socialism, and so protection comes back to the protected in the appeal of Coxey's "army" for help.

In this country the masses have not yet learned to apply the logic of the situation; but they are fast learning it. It is no new idea; the inevitable consequences of protection were foreseen years ago by students of sociological tendencies. So long ago as 1851 Cavour, the Italian economist, said:

"I maintain that the most powerful ally of socialism, in its logical relations, is the doctrine of protection. It sets out from absolutely the same principle. Reduced to its simplest terms, it affirms the right and duty of government to intervene in the employment and distribution of capital: it affirms that the function and mission of government are to substitute its more enlightened decisions for the freedecision of the individual. If these principles should become recognized as incontestably true, I do not see what answer could be made to the working classes and their representatives when they came to the government and said: 'You believe in the right and duty of regulating the distribution of capital: why not also take up the regulation of production and wages? Why not establish government workshops?'"

Germany and France, and now the United States, have verified these words. The proposition is so self-evident that it scarcely needs discussion. Speaking of Mr. Leon Say's proposition that protection insensibly leads to "nationalism," a French authority on economical questions lays down the principle that "between protection and socialism the line of distinction is very difficult to perceive." A Frenchman defined the difference as being that the protectionist was a rich man, while the socialist was a pauper.

Undoubtedly, if the robber barons are right, Coxey is also right, and so are the populists, and with more justice on the side of the latter, for their needs are greater. The populists are but the natural outgrowth of republicanism and protection.

Let Coxey blow his trumpet long and lustily at the gates of the robber barons. It is his turn now.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

THE LYNCHING OF NEGROES.

A Chance for the Republican Moral Extractor to Get in His Work.

The reported lynching of a negro brings several reflections forcibly to the mind. One of the first reflections that thus come thronging is the reflection how easy it must have been, in exciting times, to write "editorials" for the republican press. It is true that so far as the substance or the style of the articles were concerned no great difficulty attended the composition of them in off years. Only when the party was wrought up beyond the critical point by the danger to the nation, the editorial writer used to dismiss even his usual very small fear of being laughed at and let himself go with entire recklessness. The lynching of a negro was a godsend to him, or, to speak less profanely, a windfall. He squared his elbows to extract from it the most promiscuous and bewildering morals. One of them was that the south was in the saddle. Another would naturally be that the lynching showed the survival of the spirit of caste, of southern race hatred, and of the democratic contempt for the toiling masses—and the desire of the democrats to bring the toiling masses into contempt by hanging representatives of the toiling masses without process of law. These morals are all more or less dislocated by the circumstances of the latest lynching. It did not take place in any southern state, but in Pennsylvania, the seat and citadel of current republicanism, which gave a majority against the democrats and the Wilson bill at the last election of something like two hundred thousand. The extraction of republican morals from the lynching thus requires great ingenuity, and we shall look with curiosity to see what use the moral extractor makes of his unpromising material.—N. Y. Times.

——The organ of the American protective tariff league gives prominence to the statement that the price realized by farmers for the last year's crop of potatoes at a New Hampshire shipping point has been thirty-seven cents per bushel, against seventy cents for the crop of 1892, all owing to the Wilson bill. The McKinleyites must be desperately short of points when they claim that the Wilson bill, which will not be a law before next July, reduced the price of last year's potato crop thirty-three cents per bushel. The crops of 1892 and 1893 were both alike protected by the McKinley tariff. The fall on last year's crop merely shows how the McKinley tariff does not protect the farmer.—Chicago Herald.

——There is no man so poor," says a protectionist contemporary, "that he will be spared paying a tax on sugar if he eats any of it." Thus proclaims this oracle when the democrats propose to levy a tariff tax; when the republicans levy such taxes it insists that they are paid, not by the consumer, but by the foreigner.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Insurance Premiums.

Deputy Insurance Commissioner Lightbourne has completed a revised compilation showing the premiums received by the fire insurance companies in those towns of the state which have fire department, and their ratio to the losses sustained. From the table it appears that the ratio of premiums to losses in the three largest cities of the state—St. Paul, Minneapilis and Duluth—was 95 per cent, while outside of these cities it was only 75 per cent. For the entire state it was 86 per cent; in Minneapolis the loss ratio was 105 per cent; in St. Paul, 82 per cent, and in Duluth, 79 per cent. In the three cities the revised list shows the premiums received in St. Paul to have been $790,532.80; Minneapolis, $1,196,265.35; and in Duluth, $361,133.79.

Luxembourgers.

The Luxembourg congress of the United States, to be held at St. Paul, promises to be one of the great events of the coming season. Letters are being received from all the cities of prominence, from the Atlantic to the Pacific coasts, to the effect that large delegations are certain to be in attendance. A meeting of the joint Twin City committee on arrangements was held at John Heber's, on Willus street. There was a large attendance, and several short addresses were made, expressing a sanguine sentiment. Invitations were extended to 26 local German organizations to participate in the parade on the opening day, April 29. This does not include the Minneapolis contingent.

Lucky Competitors.

At a competitive examination for the cadetship at West Point for the Second congressional district the examining board, consisting of Dr. Parsons, W. R. Edwards and Ole Ostenson, 18 candidates were in attendance. The successful candidate recommended is Herbert E. Bradley, Louisberg, Lac Qui Parle county, and the alternate Ezra S. Wardell, of Tracy, Lyon county.

Those who successfully passed the examinations for appointment as cadets to West Point and Annapolis at the examination held at Moorhead are: West Point—Clifford Game, Moorhead; Karl L. Knudson, Audubon, alternate. Annapolis—George C. Thorp, Hancock; H. W. Teague, Detroit, alternate.

Arbor Day.

Gov. Nelson has issued a proclamation designating Friday, April 27, as Arbor day, and recommending that its observance be general throughout the state. He says: "The necessity for the growth of trees and the preservation of forests in our state should be an incentive to the people to give the matter their consideration. Let each person, young or old, feel it to be a duty to plant and care for one or more trees, vines or shrubs. The press, pulpit and schools can especially aid this work. They are, therefore, particularly invited to join with all other classses and agencies of society in securing a due observation of this proclamation."

Bad Record.

Joseph Lafembe, of Lambert, Polk county, has been bound over on the charge of burglarizing the blacksmith shop of Munn & Filiatrault of a quantity of tools. Bail was placed at $500, and he was remanded to jail on being unable to furnish it. He was already under $500 bail for misappropriating school board funds while treasurer of the board. He had been indicted by the grand jury, and the case will come up for trial next month. The bondsmen in the case, on his arrest for burglary, surrendered him to the district court, leaving him in charge of the sheriff.

News in Brief.

The armory of the 1st regiment, Minnesota National guard, at Minneapolis, was damaged by fire to the extent of $5,000.

The democrats of St. Paul have nominated Robt. Smith for mayor.

Henry Demars, of Crookston, was arrested upon the charge of illegal voting.

Attorney Byrnes was unable to secure $15,000 bonds for his clients, the Floyds, and as a result Louis and Frank Floyd were taken to the Stillwater prison.

The state university will open a cooking and dairying class for young ladies on June 5 and continue for one month.

Department Commander Van Sant, of the Minnesota G. A. R., has appointed Capt. Charles J. Stees, of St. Paul, as a member of the committee on Soldiers' Home. The St. Paul men appointed as aides-de-camp on Commander Van Sant's staff are: R. E. McElroy, F. C. Mallory, Charles V. Joubert, Joseph F. Chafron and John C. Miller.

Gov. Nelson, Gen. Bend and staff were tendered a banquet by Company F, 3d regiment, at the Grand hotel, at Fergus Falls. Gov. Nelson, Gen. Bend and others made addresses. There were over 100 present. It was a very successful affair and reflects great credit on the company.

Two small boys of Hastings, Michael Mollick and Henry Weldon, upon a charge of larceny of marbles from Peter Thill were committed to the reform school.

The artificial stone works at St. Cloud were burned. The building was a large two-story frame structure, and was occupied by the family of H. A. Daniels, who were gotten out through the windows of the second story, and a baby was seriously injured. The loss is about $4,000, with insurance.

Thomas Dalton, wanted at Grand Rapids, Minn., for the murder of John McCaffery, has been captured at Oakland, Cal. The murder was committed in 1892. Dalton was arrested, but escaped, and this is the first news of him.

In the oratorical contests between the high schools of Anoka and Red Wing the latter carried off the honors.

The council of Mankato passed a resolution for the establishment of a public library under the existing state laws. For some weeks a representative of a large book house has been canvassing the city for book subscriptions, and public sentiment favored the project. A tax will be levied next fall.

At a special election, Kasson voted $20,000 bonds to build a court house, provided the county seat is moved to that place.

The Spiritualist camp meeting of 1894 will be held in the grove adjoining Como Park, between the Twin Cities, during the entire month of July.

THE HASTY WORD.

Wounds That We Cause Even to Our Dearest Friend.

To think before you speak is so wise an axiom that one would hardly think it needful to emphasize it by repetition. And yet in how many cases the hasty temper flashes out in the hasty word, and the latter does its work with the precision and the pain of the swift stilletto. Singularly enough the hasty word oftenest wounds those who love one another dearly, and the very closeness of their intimacy affords them opportunity for the sudden thrust. We know the weak points in the armor of our kinsman and our friend; we are aware of his caprices, and ordinarily are tender and compassionate even of his vanities and his small fancies and whims; but there dawns a day when it is written in the book of fate that we shall be as cruel as we are loving. We are cold, or tired or hungry. We are anxious over unpaid bills, or our expected letters have not arrived, or one of the children is ailing, and we dread the outcome of the malady. So politeness fails us, fortitude is vanquished, philosophy is in abeyance, and we say that which we repent in sackcloth and ashes. But though the hasty word may be forgiven, it is not at once forgotten. It has flawed the crystal of our friendship; the place may be cemented, but there is a shadowy scar on the gleaming surface. Oh, if the word of haste had been left unspoken; if the strong hand of patience had held back the sword as it was about to strike!—Detroit Free Press.

PADEREWSKI is traveling for pleasure through Italy in remote places, far from the enticement of pianos. He will return to America next November.

AN organist says that a cow moos in a perfect fifth octave or tenth; a dog barks in a fifth or fourth; a donkey brays in a perfect octave, and a horse neighs in a descent on the chromatic scale.

AT the late jubilee in Carlsbad in honor of Labitzky, the Catholic priest composed a festival hymn, the Protestant minister wrote the words and the Jewish synagogue furnished the singers.

MUSICAL culture among working people has been tried successfully by Charlotte Mulligan, of Philadelphia. Beginning with a Sunday school class of bootblacks, she has had twelve thousand workmen under tutelage in the last twenty years.

Good Red Blood.

Blood is the source of life. The system teems with life when the blood is a bright red color. Bad blood is dark and thick, with a sluggish movement, causing disease and weakness in the body. When one has remained indoors all winter, taking little exercise, and eating food with little variety, the blood is apt to be in bad condition. For this reason so many people realize the importance of taking some first-class remedy in the spring of the year, to purify the blood. To do this, one should take a remedy especially made for the purpose. Such a remedy is Dr. Ward's Gen-De-Can-Dra for the Blood, manufactured by The J. R. Watkins Medical Company, Prop. Dr. Ward's Remedies, Winona, Minn. If you can't get it from your druggist, send to the above address: price $1.00 per bottle; 3 bottles for $2.50, express prepaid.

THE OLD HOUSE.

Cold and cheerless, bare and bleak,
The old house fronts the shabby street,
And the dull windows eastward gaze,
As their cobwebbed brows they raise,
Just as though they looked to see
What had become of you and me,
And all the other children.

The garden at the side—you know—
Where mother's flowers used to grow
Has run as wild as we'd have grown
If we had not her training known.
The vines she bent still twine each tree,
As cling her prayers to you and me,
And all the other children.

Over the eaves wrinkled and bare,
The gray moss floats like tangled hair,
If we had heard these echoes flung
Down the long halls when we were young,
We'd never scurried off to bed—
You and I—thro' the gloom o'erhead,
With all the other children.

On our wide orbs the eyes of night
Gazed softly with mesmeric light;
When mother bent above our bed
The silver moonlight touched her head,
And in my dreams her face I'd see
Madonna-like shine over me—
Shine over all her children.

The dust drifts o'er the garret floor,
The little feet tread there no more;
But o'er the stage, still standing there,
The muse first stalked with tragic air,
And whispered low to you and me
Of golden days that were to be
For us and all the children.

Good by, old house! Thy tattered cloak
Is fringed with moss and gray with smoke;
Within thy walls we used to see
A gaunt old wolf named Poverty;
Yet from thy rafters' dingy bars,
A ladder stretched up to the stars—
For us and all the children.

A STRANGE AWAKENING.

BY RICHARD DOWLING.

[Copyright, 1894, by the Author.]

SAT up in bed with a start, feeling sure I had been awakened by a noise in the house. Hearing nothing, and remembering this was my wedding morning I dropped back on the pillow, convinced that my anxiety to be in time at the church had aroused me.

I turned my eyes from side to side. It was still quite dark. Had there been daylight in the window I should have felt dismayed. January had only just begun, and the ceremony was to take place in Ferndale church at eight o'clock. If my windows were luminous there would not be time to dress and keep the most sacred tryst of all a man's life.

As I lay a minute thinking I realized the absurdity of supposing I could have been disturbed by a noise in the house. At half past six, George Thornton, my best man, was to come for me without fail. He had most faithfully promised not to let me sleep it out. If there had been a noise it must be George knocking at the door, for I was alone in the house. I lit a match and looked at my watch. It was only five o'clock. That settled the matter. There had been no noise at the door, for of course George could not make a mistake of an hour.

Ferndale common is seven miles from Charing Cross. Ferndale house, where I lay, was to be the home of Agnes and myself when we came back from Italy. It stood alone on the edge of the common.

It was by accident I found myself alone here this morning. I had taken this house and furnished it, given up my chambers in town, and intended sleeping this night at the Dale hotel in the main road, but the man I had engaged to act as caretaker during our honeymoon failed to reach my place the evening before, and rather than leave the house unprotected I decided to pass the night in it myself.

As I lay with an hour before me, I had nothing but the most delightful thoughts to occupy my mind. After the first uneasy feeling of waking suddenly I began to congratulate myself on snatching from sleep this chance for delightful reverie. I was young, my health was perfect, I had lately inherited a large fortune from a distant relative, and I was about to marry the girl I had loved for three years from whom I had been kept apart for want of means. In the heyday of youth we were going to visit Italy, the land of dreams, of beauty, poetry. I whispered to myself:

"Only four days, and I shall be in Venice with my darling and no care for the future."

As my whisper died away on the black air I raised my head and listened; unmistakably a sound this time. The sound was repeated. It could not be George, for the noise was in the house, and he would have to knock or ring and be let in by me. Besides it was too early for him.

RAISED THE LIGHT AND PEERED AROUND THE ROOM.

Could it be that George's knock had only just aroused me, and that having rung and knocked and despaired of waking me, he had got in through a window? Or could it be the caretaker, who, believing the house empty, had forced an entrance? Thieves would not defer their visit to so late an hour.

I heard the sound once more. I could now make out what it was. Some one downstairs was going from room to room. There was no attempt at concealment, no stealth. George must have come an hour too soon, and forgotten where I slept.

The step began to ascend the stairs. I was on the point of jumping out of bed to greet George when I heard a noise which turned me cold and held me fast. My head fell back on the pillow.

The man ascending the stairs had uttered a long groan!

I am as free from supernatural fears as most men, but, is any man alive free from them? I am not. Until that night I thought I was, but I quaked and trembled on my bed. The cold sweat broke out on my forehead. I could not feel my heart beat.

The door opened; a long, skluny left hand bearing a light was thrust into the room. A gaunt, white figure entered. In the right hand glittered a long, lean knife!

The figure raised the light high and peered round the room.

The hair was gray, the beard was gray and close clipped. When the intruder saw me he uttered a profound groan of relief, turned round, and locked the door.

I could not lift a limb. I could not move my head. I was fascinated, basilisked, comatose.

He took the key out of the lock and faced the bed once more. Without moving from the door he stared long with grim delight at me. Then, while never removing his eyes from me, he raised the candle to his lips and blew out the light.

We were in perfect darkness. He and I were alone!

Long silence followed. Suddenly the darkness of the room was pierced by a wild burst of demoniac laughter, shrill, fierce, appalling.

My eyes were useless, as though already in the grave. Then I heard from some point close to the bed a low, deep, guttural voice, whispering triumphantly. It said:

"I have found one here! I have found one at last! I have found a subject! This subject unfortunately is living, but that can soon be remedied. One stab at the carotid and the blemish of life will be removed. Then we can see if always the thin pink line between the fingers disappears in death! Then we can see if the aorta is always empty! Bah! Fools that they were! They took away my instruments from me and they locked me up with a lot of madmen! They locked me up. Dr. Harry Cruden, the greatest biologist of all the age, with a lot of driveling idiots! I, who first among men held the fountain of life in the palm of my hands."

The madman uttered these words in a voice of hoarse rapture. As he spoke my presence of mind came back. I was alone in the dark with an armed lunatic, bent on killing me.

I felt him approaching the bed on the left. Silently and cautiously I moved to the right side and slipped out from under the clothes. I drew away from the bed until I got my back against the wall. I was new to the room. I could not lay my hand on the matches.

HELD HIM PRONE.

I pressed myself against the wall as if I would drive my body through it. I had no thought of Agnes, no thought of succor, no thought of prayer. I had only one idea in my soul—that I could feel the cold radiating from the point of his invisible knife against the great fiery hot throbbing artery in my neck.

That soul-quaking voice sounded again in a whisper:

"I blew out the light because I could not bear to watch the wretch die. But now I cannot find him. I cannot see his bloodless craven face. Science demands a victim. Let him die! Hah!"

I heard a fierce heavy blow on the bed. I heard the point of the knife strike against the steel lath under the mattress.

All my faculties awoke, all my bodily vigor returned. With a shout I flung myself on the bed and grappled with the man.

There had not been time for him to withdraw the knife before I reached his wrist. He was old and feeble.

I broke his hand away from its grip upon the haft of the knife, and drawing both his arms behind him, held him prone, my knee upon his back.

So he and I remained until George Thornhill came.

"He must have escaped from the private lunatic asylum at the east edge of the common," said George.

When the caretaker came we sent the madman home. The poor creature had a little after bedtime escaped from the asylum in his night shirt and frightened the wits out of several people on the common, about which he had been wandering for hours before he got into Ferndale house through a door which had been left open by me in my ignorance of the place. It is two years since Agnes and I returned from our honeymoon. Even still if I awake in the night and hear unusual sounds I cannot help recalling in a most unpleasant manner what awoke me on my marriage morning.

SAMSON'S THE STUFF.

A Novel-Reading Youth Strikes a Great Bit of Literature.

He walked into the bookstore and stopped before the Bible department. He leaned over the counter and said to the ministerial-looking salesman:

"Is them Buffalo Bill's books over thar?"

"Nope. Religious works."

"Don't none o' them read about chasin' Injuns and shootin' wild varmints?"

"Not exactly."

"Nothin' about a feller 'at could knock 'em out like John L., ner a feller 'at's slick at er Winchester, er had the nerve to tackle er b'ar?"

"Oh, yes. One better than that."

"Who's he?"

"Samson."

"What'd he do?"

"Oh, he had a fight with a lion."

"Laid 'em out, did 'e?"

"Yes, he killed the lion."

"Jes' bored 'im with er Winchester?"

"Nope."

"Biffed 'im in the head with er ax, I s'pect?"

"Nope."

"Jes' kyarved 'm with his bowie?"

"No, he just caught the beast by the throat and choked him to death."

"You don't say!"

"Yes. He was the strongest man that ever lived."

"Wusser'n John L.?"

"Yes."

"An' wusser'n Jimmie Corbett?"

"Samson could knock them both out at once."

"Whoopee! ain't he the stuff? I'll take two o' them Samson books."—Atlanta Constitution.

FASHION LETTER.

An Embarrassment of Riches—Dainty and Exquisite Array of Midsummer Attire—Materials for Dresses, Etc.

[Special New York Correspondence.]

The shops are glowing with an embarrassment of fashion riches, including a dainty and exquisite array of midsummer attire. Organdies, Marie Antoinette muslins of the finest texture sprinkled with tiny bouquets of loveliest flowers. French batistes, India lawns, zephyr fabrics, etc. A season of cottons is already assured, judging by the large advance sales of these beautiful textiles. Moreover the summer fashions, as well as those now adopted, can be most charmingly and effectively carried out in these soft, sheer materials. The full round waists, the distended sleeves, flowing skirts, shoulder frills, bretelles, plastrons, collarettes, jacket-fronts, guimpes and all the other taking little et ceteras of the summer toilet will be seen at their very best in the airy goods, and semi-diaphanous fabrics of the hot weather season. Dainty tints that look cool will be the most used in making up new toilets of cotton. Their favored trimmings are insertions and edgings of lace, lace, lace, ad infinitum, varied only by colored embroideries, and white embroideries that resemble open-patterned laces in their design. On toilets that are intended to be worn the summer through, without washing, ribbon garnitures will be added to those of lace. Dresses of cream-white ground with dainty colored patterns will be trimmed with satin or moire ribbons the color of the design, while pretty contrasts of color will be used in silk or velvet, as a lilac creped gingham with reseda stock collar and girdle, or a sage green cotton crepon with ciel blue stock and belt.

Some of the dressy skirts for summer are accordion plaited; others show a simple gathered round skirt, with deep hem turned up on the outside. Triple flounces of dotted Swiss muslin, plain or flowered, are set upon narrowly gored skirts of undotted, unpatterned Swiss muslin, the flounces edged with lace insertion. Added basques and panier effects, jackets with shirt waists beneath, also panels and overskirts both long and short are the height of fashion. Cream, ecru, black and butter-colored laces in scores of lovely patterns and styles, also Irish linen edgings, insertions, borderings, shoulder, neck and sleeve pieces will be used to trim every sort of summer gown excepting those which emanate from the tailor for strict utility uses or those of linen and duck in white, tan and ecru.

The new models have much shorter coats than have been worn for months past, and have open straight fronts and revers, the back fitted closely to the waist line, and very full below. A shirt waist invariably completes the costume. Just now serge and sacking skirts, with cape en suite for street wear, are worn with serpentine waists of changeable silk or striped or dotted satin. Short jackets are made with revers that widen to form a deep collar across the back, which is deeper yet over the sleeve tops. Many of the plainer serge and sacking gowns, made by the best of tailors, are simply finished with rows of silk stitching and rely upon the silk shirt waist for the only bit of brightness about the dress. Draped skirts are being developed in the most graceful manner possible, though many women who find the plain skirt more becoming still elect for it, and while the gored skirt is an ideal one for a short, stout figure, the modiste can greatly relieve the monotony of this severe skirt for her tall, slender patrons by the addition of flounce, overdrapery, tunics, basques, etc. Matrons cling to the longer skirted coats, while younger women and girls prefer for next season the shorter jacket effects, which afford an opportunity for wearing the very natty shirt waists and blouses that are to rage more generally than ever.

Rather wide milliners' folds, pipings and gimps of every color and effect, plain, jetted, beaded, spangled, iridescent, etc., are used on stylish spring gowns. Taffetas take the lead among the popular silks for this and the coming season. The variety is simply endless, but the shot, dotted, flowered and satin-stripedpatterns find immense sale.

Black and white mixtures in dress have lost none of the great favor extended to them last year, for they appear among the very highly-favored color melanges of the season.

Bonnets are mere baby head coverings, but hats are large and showy. Lace and rarest French flowers are the chosen trimmings for "dress" headcoverings, but on toques, turbans and tiny Princess Maud bonnets for traveling, shopping and the like, ribbon loops, rosettes and spreading Alsatian bows, made of beautiful fancy ribbons in satin, moire, grosgrain and shot armure, are the "leaders."

Sashes of every width and color reappear on the latest Parisian gowns but for ceremonious wear and for day toilets, from seersucker to satin surah, the round waist and the pointed bodice with bretelles and shoulder frills are rivals in favor. And another silent warfare is going on between the jacket and the cape, the latter having got the better of the contest thus far.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS PLEASE state that you saw the Advertisement in this paper.

If your nearest, best and most esteemed neighbors had written the following letters they could be no more worthy of your confidence than they now are, coming, as they do, from well known, intelligent and trustworthy citizens who, in their several neighborhoods, enjoy the fullest confidence and respect of all.

Mrs. F. L. Inman, of Manton, Wexford Co., Mich., whose portrait heads this article, writes as follows: "I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription about a year ago. For years I have suffered with falling and ulceration of the womb, but to-day, I am enjoying perfect health.

I took four bottles of the 'Prescription' and two of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Every lady suffering from female weakness should try the 'Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery.'"

Miss Mary J. Tanner, North Lawrence, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., writes: "I was sick for four years. For two years I could do no work. I had five different physicians, who pronounced my case a poor or impoverished condition of the blood, and uterine trouble. I suffered a great deal with pain in both sides, and much tenderness on pressing over the womb. I bloated at times in my bowels and limbs; was troubled with leucorrhea. I could not sleep, and was troubled with palpitation of the heart. Suffered a great deal of pain in my head, temples, forehead and eyes. I had a troublesome cough, raised a great deal and at times experienced a good deal of pain in my chest and lungs. My voice at times was very weak. I suffered excruciating monthly, periodical pains. Since taking seven bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription some time ago, I have enjoyed better health than I have for more than four years previously; in fact, for several months past I have been able to work at sewing. I have gained in weight thirty-nine pounds since taking your medicines; the soreness and pain have disappeared." Yours truly,

Mary J. Tanner

Mrs. Alex. Robertson, of Half Rock, Mercer Co., Mo., writes: "For twenty years, I suffered with womb disease and most of the time I was in constant pain which rendered life a great burden. I cannot express what I suffered. I had eight doctors and all the medicine I had from them failed—the one after the other.

I was nervous, cold hands and feet, palpitation, headache, backache, constipation, leucorrhea and no appetite, with bearing-down pains. I got so weak I could not walk around. I had to keep my bed, thinking I would never get any better.

One day my husband got one of your little books and read it to me. He said there was nothing doing me any good. I said I would try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I did try it. After the first few weeks my appetite was better; I was able to sit up in bed. I wrote to the World's Dispensary Medical Association, at Buffalo, N. Y., and described my case; they sent me a book on woman's diseases. I read carefully and followed the directions as near as I could and took the medicine for two years. With the blessing of God and your medicines, I am entirely cured. That was three years ago."

Yours truly,

Mrs. Alex Robertson

DELANO DIARY

—Services in the M. E. church next Sunday morning and evening. Subject at night, "The kingdom unlocked."

—River Street and a portion of Bridge street still present the appearance of huge mortar beds. As soon as the weather becomes more settled and the street commissioner can get to work we presume there will be a change.

--Rev. Soares, of Minneapolis, preached at the Presbyterian church on Sunday morning and evening. He announced that Elder Wright would be present next Sunday and protracted meeting would be started to continue while good was being done.

—A carriage load of delegates includ-Messrs. Dewey and Wilder, and Misses Moody, Davis, Parslow and Wilder, visited Monticello, on Saturday to attend the Christian Endeavor Convention. They were home in time to attend school on Monday morning. The weather was rainy and the roads muddy.

—It is hoped by many of our leading citizens that the council will be wise enough to have our new waterworks supplied with the purest water to be found in this vicinity, noted for its good water. Pure water means health. Poor water means sickness, big doctor bills, and other inconveniences.

—Some objections were heard from some of the audience at Friday evening's entertainment, to the use of cigarettes on the stage. It was thought that a better example to the young and tender minds would have been given by not having that part of the lines. Other parts could have been ommited with equal prospeirty.

—"Brother Bill and Me" and "A box of Monkeys" by the Delano Public school, at the City Hall, last Friday evening was well attended. The selection of performers was good, and the parts rendered in excellent style. About $40 was netted for the payment of the Encyclopaedia for the school. There is talk of the play being taken to some of our neighboring towns in the near future.

—It was fashionable a few years back for large patches to be worn on the knees and other parts of the anatomy of small boys and of men; some ladies acquired the knack of sewing these in so neatly as to be almost imperceptible to the public eye, while others simply applied a piece of cloth large enough to cover the hole and stitched it on, making quite a prominent patch. Some of the patches on our sidewalk remind us of the unskillful ones.

—The McKinly meeting has been a source of slight inspiration to our local Soup-House Billy, and he has his kettle already on and is stirring vigorously, preparatory to furnishing a portion of the menu, evan for the State feast. His Pidgeon is for that purpose. This is good diet for tender stomachs. Some of the more delicate morsels are reserved for the county ticket while we would not be surprised if the Congressional feast would be entirely Eaton, as prepared by the skilful cook from Wright.

—No town is more favorable situated than is Delano for a proper system of drainage. A commencent has been made. Large tiling has been placed along the South side of Bridge Street several smaller drains leading into it; thereby the central part of the village is now fairly well rid of surplus water. By a little more thorough drainage in some parts of town and then prohibiting the piling of manure in alleys and on vacant lots until it becomes a nuisance: the use of dry earth closets a recommended by the State Board of Health Delano could easily and at little expence be made one of the best drained and cleanest towns in the State.

—Dr. C. B. Ames will have his office at his residence on the corner of Second and Bridge streets, in future.

—Dell Young and Andrew Reider are reaping a haryest out of the strike by carrying passengers and freight to and from Rockford station.

--Miss Sophia Soshnick has secured the Welker school for the summer term. Delano furnishes her quota of teachers promptly now-a-days.

—Our village authorthes have wisely concluded to hire a lawer for the ensuing year that buisness may be transacted legally. Corect. M. A. O'Hair has the job.

—The twenty Franklin farmers who purchased a two thousand dollar horse, recently, seem not to have been first class judges of the equine and are hunting for the seller.

—The school desires to thank the store keepers and others who kindly loaned the use of stage fixngs and other articles used in their play.

R. C. DEWEY

—Mr. A. E. Powell has gone into the business of cleaning and repairing organs. If you have an organ that needs cleaning, leave your order at this office and it will be promptly attended to.

Price $1.00.

—Rev. Powell concluded a trip to Montrose and return on last Sunday was rather too much of a journey for him, and old Jim consequently traveled but one way leaving us without service Sunday evening.

—Mr. Franzen informs us that we need not publish his advertisement longer, as he has found renters for all his houses. For one of them two. Who says it does not pay to make your wishes known to the public?

—At Tuesday evenings' special meeting of the council it was voted to instruct the Recorder to correspond with parties concerning the procuring of plans and specifications for waterworks andelectric light plant for Delano. Sendalong your plans.

—James Nelson and David McLeod and several others passed through town yesterday afternoon on their way by "special," from Dassel to the Sawdust City. They ran into this station without whistling.

—Joseph Masanz children have been having sore throats and on Wednesday a physician was called; but Rosa grew worse and died before morning. Mr. M's farm adjoins that of Joseph Neison whose family had diphtheria last fall and it is feared shat this may prove to be another outbreak caused by some lingering germs.

—The village council are preparing to place the village bonds on the market for $10,000 to put in a water and electric light plant as soon as arrangments can be completed. Minneapolis a few days ago sold $500,000, 4½ per cent bonds at a premium of $17,000. If our council can do anything like as well in proportion to the size of the bonds to be sold they will exceeed the hopes of the most sanguine.

—No train appeared at our station on Wednesday morning from either east or west until near noon when a freight came from the city bringing some anxiously awaited goods to some of our merchants; soon after a passenger train with an engine hitched on behind and two sets of hands complete ready for a race if they should be interfered with by strikers passed through town leaving the belated morning mail. Strikes are rather expensive and altogether inconvenient to people long accustomed to depend on the trains for so much.

—If the Village council expect to have any income from the water works they must find another source of supply than Crow River. Nobody living so near Minneapolis and being acquainted with her frequent outbreaks of winter cholera and typhoid fever, attributed to the use of river water at certain seasons of the year, is going to supply their families with germs of that kind if they can get good healthy water so easily as they can in Delano. No medical men will recommend its use, and the income will indeed be light.

The cost of wells would be a very small item and the supply would be inexhaustable and people not afraid to use it. Well water will put out a fire as quickly as the river water if properly used. There can be no good reason for pumping water from the ford above town to the highest part of town and then allowing it to run down again, when plenty of better water can be secured at or near the spot where the stand pipes are located.

There is the poorest kind of economy in supplying the village with an expensive system of water-works for the purpose of extinguishing fires alone, and with no prospect of a revenue, when the finest water in the country could be furnished with little or no extra expense, and which people would gradually learn to bring into their places of business or residences, and which all new builders would figure on using, and which would each year grow more renumerative to the village. By all means supply the new system with the best drinking water to be had and NOT ASK THE PEOPLE TO DRINK FROM THE RIVER.

—Dr. Catlin of the Buffala Gazette has been obliged to part with his compositor, Geo. Blackwell, on account of "hard times." It is very evident the Doctor feels the effects of the Cleveland administration and that the present governing power at Washington is more of a tax than the McKinly tariff. —Eagle.

—I. Gutzwiller, Jr. of the Delano Eagle has been obliged to part with some of his force and place others on short time, on account of "hard times." It is very evident Ignatius, Jr. feels the effects of the McKinly bill, under which the country is doing business, and finds it inadequate to maintaining the srices of the workin men.

Personals.

John McGary, an Independence hustler was in Delano Tuesday.

Dr. Shrader and J. P. Chance tried the mud to Hanover yestercay.

Mr. C. Cory ventured to ride on the G. N'n., on Tuesday, to Howard Lake.

Simeon Morris, of Independence, was transacting business in Delano, Tuesday.

John Williams, a veteran of the Mexican war and an Independence Democrat was a GAZETTE caller last Friday.

Mrs. M. A. Chance came home Monday from Elbow Lake and Mrs. Cora Peters left for that place on Tuesday evening.

Prof. Beck was in town on Tuesday and Wednesday attending to the musical instruction of some of our citizens.

Miss Carrie Florida, of Rockford, drives over on Fridays and Saturdays each week to give lessons in music to several young Delanoites.

Albert Eppel, Delano's able representative in Uncle Sam's mail service is enjoying an indefinite vacation. The finny tribe had best lay low.

Section boss John Kuka, ran his train out on Wednesday morning. But during his tempo rary absence it was overturned and John joined the outs.

Rev. J. W. Davies and wife, of Brooklyn Center, drove up Monday, for a few day's visit with Delano relatives and friends. The Elder says it was a ten hours drive.

Miss Emma Kubon, of Minneapolis, who has been visiting her Aunt Mrs. Wm. Zabel, for a couple of weeks, intending to remain for the summer was summoned home on Tuesday.

Ernest Otto came up on the noon train that passed through here. Ex-mayor Coolen could not purchase a ticket and was left in Minneapolis until a more favorable opportunity presents.

School Notes.

MISS GRACE O'HAIR, Editor,
EDWARD FREEMAN Assis't.

There was no meeting of the Senate last Friday as examinations were held on that day.

Pickwick has not met for some time, but perhaps will meet again before long as every one is anxious to bear again some of Mark Twain's witty selections.

From appearances, the girls of the school will soon be as efficient in playing ball as the boys.

The thermometer fell to 26 below in the labratory in a very few minutes, but it was under the influence of SO2.

The scholars are quite well satisfied with the success of the plays, about $32 was cleared, but it still lacks about $28 of being enough, so it has been planned to play in Buffalo and Monticello on Apr. 27 and 28.

Mrs. Dewey made a trip to the city last Saturday, returning Monday morning.

Two of our scholars Sophia Sosnick and Frances Bauman will leave school this week and expect to begin teaching in a short time. They have both been regular attendants and studious pupils and every one is sorry to see them go.

The countenance of one of our seniors while exderimenting in the chemistry room was made almost unrecognizable by the applying of carbon in various forms by one of the girls.

One of the Junior girls has left us to suppose that she has Celtic blood in her veins, by saying, in speaking of the hospitality of the good people of Monticello, that they would not permit her to enter the house until she had gone upstairs to her room and washed her face.

The performance became so real to one of the girls in taking part in "The Family Row" that she gave her partner a resounding thung on the head with the broom.

It is too bad that no performance can be given in Delano without a number of rowdies disturbing the audience. During our play of Friday eve a number of boys who will never become gentlemen unless they change their ways amused themselves by throwing gravel against thewindows and by interfering with the doortender. We are sorry to say that one of our High School boys was the ring leader, and others from the intermediate department followed his lead. It seems as though one who has advanced as far as our High School ought to know the difference between rowdyism and gentlemanly sport. The next time anything of this kind occurs the culprits will be made examples of.

Gazette and Weekly St. Paul Globe until May 1, $1.00 Year.

County Cullings.

Isaac Homer, of French Lake, lost his house by fire last week.

We are informed that although Montrose voted by one majority to grant liquor license none has been asked for. Mr Smith, who run the business last year claiming that there is no money in it at that place, and designing sooon to take his departure for Wisconsin.

A. H. Willits after about four years of newspaper life on the "Post," at Annandale, has surrendered his job to younger men. Messrs James N Rickerson and R. H. Dudley will in future run the paper, and doubtless give Annandale a newsy sheet. Mr. W. is to enter the Granger field; lay away his silk tile and go try erecting fence posts. He is bound not to give up the post business. Success to all parties.

The next thing you know caucuses will be held and delegates elected to go to the county conventions to select delegates to attend congressional and state conventions to aid in making our tickets for this fall's election. If you wish to have any voice in choosing who you will have on the ticket of your party to vote for, attend these caucuses and do your best to have them honest and fair expressions of your respective communities. If you haven't interest enough in the welfare of your country to do what you can to assist in purifying your own party in this way, don't come around after the ticket is nominated and whine about its being a poor one.

Among Our Exchanges.

The republicans of St. Paul last Tuesday nominated one of the leading members of the A. P. A. for mayor. He is the Rev. F. B. Doran, pastor of one of the leading Methodist churches of that city. If a Catholic priest should be nominated by any party for any office there would be a roar go up from one end of the land to the other that the Romanists were endeavoring to get control of tne country. Yet under our American constitution a Catholic priest is guaranteed the same rights and privileges accorded a Methodist or any other denominational minister. —Wabasha Democrat.

ROCKFORD RIPPIES.

Miss Georgia Guptill left Tuesday morning to commence teaching school near Anoka. Success to her.

Chas and John Guptill, Mrs. Moores and her daughter visited Minneapolis to make real estate transfer. Charles and Johnny retiring to the farm and Mrs. Moores moving into Rockford.

Mrs. M. C. O'Loughlin accompanied by her little daughter Gracie visited Mrs. W. L. Haggerty on Wednesday.

Forest and Delmont Gent went on a week's trapping up the North fork of the Crow River. Look out for furs to go down.

Dell Young meets every train on the Soo line since Jim Hill and his men got to loggerheads. Rockford beats Delano now; the former has trains; the latter nothing but a streak of right away and two rusty rails.

Chape Farnham has ceased his triweekly trips to the station, you know. Ask him.

FRENCH LAKE NEWS.

On account of rain and snow spring work is quite backward in this vicinity; very few farmers having much seeding done; but a few dry days will have the ground in excellent condition.

The marriage of Miss Annie Ronbuck to Peter Nelson of Kingston was solemnized at the office of Justice M. C. O'Donohoe, last Tuesday afternoon. The happy young couple returned to the house of the bride's parents where they participated in a wedding dance. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson are visiting relatives in Dassel now.

One of Annandale's merchants appears to be getting quite interested with a young Miss of this town. He may be successful if his brother don't run opposition to him as usual.

It is said that Mr. Ronbuck is under the weather on account of taking a tie pass to Buffalo, to visit the County Attorney.

Victor Rosseau and his sister and Miss Annie Shambo, of Chatham, was out fishing one night last week and caught a few suckers for breakfast.

A. J. Linberg did a big business in his store Saturday, even if it was raining.

James Mulqueeny has moved to Buffalo, where he will make his home. Mr. Baker, of Annandale, is intending to move onto the farm that Mr. Mulqueeny leaves, in the near future.

W. H. Spath, of Dassel and Mr. Sexton, of Cokato, was attending to business here one day last week.

Dennis Mulqueeny is still confined to the bed with the effects of rheumatism.

Miss Johnsen is visiting relatives in Kingston for a few days.

One of our new settlers visited the blind pig at Cokato Saturday and returned home buzzy.

C. M. O'Laughlin is taking up medical studies under Dr. O'Conner, of Maple Lake.

Our correspondent to the Annandale Post had a very nice piece in last week; but he forgot one important item. He is breaking in a colt to drive to Chatham; he intends to keep company with Miss Louize Shambo if some one else don't; if they do he will stop on the pearch.

W. C. O'Loughlin has opened a three months term of school in Albion; now he says it is a snap for a bachelor.

Eli Joseph and Emil Sandal entered the ring one day last week. Joseph soon threw up the sponge as usual, and begged for safety.

The parties netting in French Lake had better quit at once for they will get into more trouble than they are aware of. Shooting into the sky is not going to stop us from taking the nets.

Miss Bridget L. O'Loughlin came home Friday from Waverly where she has been visiting relatives for the past two weeks.

A few of our farmers are contemplating the purchasing of buggies this summer. We advise them to call on R. W. Rousseau, of Annandale, before they buy; he has one of the best single rigs ever made; he made a flying trip through town one day last week with four ladies.

I believe in courting; but, I don't believe in courting the whole family.

DIED.

MASANZ.—On Thursday, April 19, Rosa, aged 6 years, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Masanz.

THE DISCONTENTED MAN.

He grieved because the times were hard,
And everything went wrong;
Such weather would his trade retard,
The butter tasted strong,
His coffee never looked quite clear,
And everything he bought was dear.

In fact, from early dawn till night
He gloried in his woes;
No earthly thing was ever right,
And all his friends were foes,
But this fact most his patience tried:
His wife was always satisfied!

BOTH BLUE AND GRAY.

MARY GILMER FOOTE, [In the Toledo Blade.]

Our hearts to-day are far away,
Away where Southern breezes blow,
Where forms who wore of old the gray;
And those who wore the blue lie below,
All buried in one common tomb,
Beneath the sweet magnolia's bloom.

Wild blossoms bloom as bright above
The conscript clad in rebel gray,
As from the dust of those we love,
"Our boys in blue"—this balmy May—
God grant we imitate these flowers,
Observing our memorial hours.

And place a chaplet on each mound—
On blue and gray, on gray and blue—
That links of love be bound around,
And faith's firm fetters forged anew
Between the twain who freely gave
Their all to fill a soldier's grave.

One fought beneath our ensign grand,
Died for the red, the white, the blue,
He sleeps within the stranger's land,
Beneath the Southern sod and dew,
Where battle plain with human gore
Ran crimson in the days of sore.

The other sleeping by his side—
Fell! Well! Ah well! but then this May,
We come to laurel both, nor pride
Ourselves as victors, in the fray—
Besides both blue and gray shall meet
Alike before God's mercy seat.

Our Father knows no blue or gray,
And he who said "Come unto me.
I am the Life, the Truth and way
Which know, and that shall make you free,"
Taught that, but love and love alone,
Was reckoned at the heavenly throne.
Denver, Colo.

MARSHAL BEDE has proven himself a good officer so soon. He has already had considerable opportunity, in dealing with strikers, prepairing for Coxey's army, etc. etc. His eloquent tongue serves as his best weapon, and takes the place of dozens of deputies.

THE Breckenridge-Pollard affair was supposed to have been settled so far as the public is concerned, when the jury rendered its verdict and the defendent was taxed $15,000 and costs. But now comes the news that the Star of Kentucky wants a new trial. Perhaps his conscience troubles him and he wants still futher to confess.

A BATTLE is reported at Billings Mont. between 650 Coxeyites from the West assisted by citizens, and 87 Deputy Marshals sent to capture them. The Marshals are reported as firing on the crowd fatally wounding a a citizen and injuring others. The Coxeyites were victorious but were afterwards captured at Forsgth, where they were surrounded by soldiers from Fort Keough, while most of them were asleep on a train they had unceremoniously appropriated for their uses.

AMONG agricultural products which the Wilson bill proposes to put on the free list we note, for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that somebody has to pay that much more for their living, without, as it appears, helping us Western people a bit on our prices, the following articles, their rate of duty and the amount of tariff received for them in 1893 under the Mc Kinley bill:

| Articles. | Rate. | Value. | Duty. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Milk, fresh, 5 cts gal. | | $1,429 75 | $313.95 |
| Broom corn, $8 per ton, | | 524.00 | 98.02 |
| Cabbage, 3 cents each, | | 13,178.34 | 9,060.49 |
| Eggs, 5 cts per doz, | | 392,616.90 | 164,792.12 |

The above tariff as per the present law will afford some of our readers an opportunity to judge of the articles taxed and the amounts collected, while, according to the theory "that times are hard because of the fear that the Democrats will reduce the tariff" many a western man's mouth must have been watering for these many months in anticipation of the time when the Senators from York State and a few others would condescend to allow the Democrats to redeem their biggest pledge by giving us a free list which will allow lovers of fish and other articles to satiate their appetites without drawing on their pocket books quite so heavily And salt for all purposes can be secured at a considerable reduction from present prices. This national pride of protecting our home market has been carried too far. People are beginning to learn that there is a steady increase in the number of men who live on the charity of others rather than those who are enabled by the "protected" to death "home market" to buy our western products, the prices of which, for some reason or another has been gradually gowing down, down ever since Mr. McKinley hoisted up the tariff on them, in order to supply us with a home market.

COXEY'S army which is coming from the corners of our country and getting to Washington the best way it can, afoot and on horseback; and even impressing into service farmer's teams and railroads, seems now to be of more consequence than was generally supposed possible. The plan is to overwhelm Congress by their presence in such numbers and ask Congress to pass laws for good roads and plenty of money for the poor who are willing to work. Of course there is no good reason why poor people cannot petition Congress for their wants as well as can the wealthy; and the army brought to Washington by Coxey, if it conducts its self properly is certainly entitled to as much respect as the hoards of office seekers and of rich people who throng the galleries and lobbies, and dine and wine and beg Congress to pass laws favoring this or that scheme where by they expect to add to their wealth. It does not seem necessary for either party to be present at the Capital; but the presence of one establishes a precident whereby the other army may claim a hearing. As for the new army being beggers as some claim; in the true sence of the word those who have grown fat financially beg a pass over railroads; and when in the presence of Congressmen importune them in the strongest possible ways, making a study of the weakness of individual members and takeing advantage of their knowledge. It remains for Congress to give all citizens a proper hearing, as the right of petition is reserved to them by the Constitution of the United States. May 1 is the day for Coxey to appear at Washington then we will see how he and his army and Congress will get along together.

Great Northern Strike.

There is two sides to most stories and of course the stories of the officials of the G. N. and the men who are striking don't just jibe in all respects. President Hill claims the strike was something sudden; that he was not aware that a feeling of dissatisfaction was prevalent among the employes of the road, and that the wages schedule had not been agreed upon as amended; but that the men were simply asked to take less pay for their services. As near as we can learn these are the claims. While employes claim that a reduction of about 15 per cent had been made; section men getting a dollar a day and to work Sunday without pay: and others in proportion, that all wages had been cut but train men; and now they were to be cut in April; the other wages having been reduced August 1, last year. It is claimed that a bill made on the old schedule had been returned for correction according to the new schedule; also that 37 men had been discharged from shops at Great Falls, Montana, and the work ordered to St. Cloud; that arrangements were being made for a general lockout of employes and that haying found it out the men struck. Marshall Bede has traveled over the road and made several arrests for interfering with U. S. mails, and in his own inimical way in formed people generally to keep off of Uncle Sam's toes. Mails are being run about once each way daily. Few Passengers and little express goes along; no freights have been run lately. The strike is general from St. Paul to the Pacific, and is one of the largest known. The strikers ask for a restoration of the wages as they were previous to August 1, last. Gov. Nelson advised arbitration of the differences. J. J. Hill offered to stand by the verdict of a man chosen by the company, one by the employes and a third chosen by these two or by one or both together of two judges named by himself. This proposition was rejected by the meetings of the employes.

THE LATEST.- The strikers still insist on a restoration of the old schedule and refuse to arbitrate. J. J. Hill is starting out through trains, and is said to be determined to run with new men if the old ones will not work. He claims to have 1500 or 2000 applications on file.

The Money Question.

Some politicians are endeavoring to make people believe that the great and leading question of today, in this country, is "What shall we have for money; shall it be gold; or gold and silver; or paper; or shall all three be used as money?" As a matter of fact it matters not what represents a dollar, here to home, so long as everybody is glad to get it whether it is metal or paper: and one dollar is as good as another just as long as people use them so. But, when we come to trade with other countries, paper is at once ruled out. Some countries have a silver standard and would prefer our silver, others would have nothing but our gold: and, until there is adopted a standard by all countries the same; an international money standard, it seems the proper thing to use the three kinds of money now used and keep them all even, by keeping them all legal tender for all debts in this country. We hear a great deal about the depreciation of silver but in fact our business is being transacted today with gold, silver, and paper, as it has for years past, and there is no apparent reason why this may not continue. Some people like one kind of money better than another; so long as its purchasing power is the same let them have it. Congressman Hall in a speech, said, every yard must 36 inches long whatever material it is composed of: and so with a dollar it must contain a hundred cents whether made of one material or another. So long as a nation has wealth enough behind it its dollars are good; but when they issue more dollars than they have resources like a man who goes in debt beyond his means they can pay only a percentage on the dollar; and the currency depreciates in proportion to the lack of funds with which to redeem it. There are good reasons for having each kind of money. Gold is handy as being imperishable, yet large amounts, counting value can be easily taken care of. Silver is desirable for change smaller than gold, and is, also, capable of standing wear for a long time. For carrying from one place to another in large amounts, paper is preferabe; but it must be handled with more care than is required by the metals. At the present time there appears to be a scarcity of money even with gold, silver, and paper, all in use, and each as good as the other and equally as hard to get.

That Income Tax.

Much has been written and spoken concerning the new income tax law now pending in Congress. We are in receipt of a copy through the kindness of D. W. Voorhees, Chairman of the Senate Finance committee, from which we learn it is a modification of the law in force during the sixties; when our country was in need. The old law collected five percent on all incomes over one thousand dollars.

Our country is now in the greatest need of financial help; and the poor people are the least able to assist in contributing to her needs in a proportion far above their share under the workings of the present tariff system, so it is proposed to use the income system for a while again, but in a modified form. The rate to be only two percent and that on incomes exceeding four thousand dollars; to be paid annually.

The income is defined as being the amount made over and above actual expenses of hire, rent, and of taxes paid for state, school and other purposes and of loss in trade, fire unless covered by insurance; but does not deduct for improvements, additions, etc., to buildings and other property.

Persons having an income of over three thousand five hundred dollars are required to make and render a list or return on or before the day provided by law.

The penalty for nonpayment when due is to levy an additional 5 per cent on the amount of taxes unpaid and interest at the rate of one per cent per month until paid.

Government officers including Senators and Congressmen receiving over four thousand dollars income are to come under the law;

Any collector or other officer divulging the operations, style of work, or apparatus of any manufacturer or producer visited by him in any other than a lawful way shall be subject to fine and imprisonment and be dismissed from office and forever incapable of holding any office under the government.

The law is calculated to equalize taxes according to wealth more than the Mc Kinley plan of making every family pay for every thing used by it at tariff rates. Poor families use more to eat and wear in a year than wealthy ones, often, and have to pay more tariff in proportion on cheaper grades of goods.

Hay Cut.

Grover Cleveland has finally deposed that rank partisan, Eugene Hay, from the district attorneyship by appointing E. C. Stringer, of St. Paul. Several candidates were in the field but all seem satisfied with Mr. Stringers appointment.

THE BANNER OF REFORM.

Mr. Cleveland Unfurls it to The Party Gaze.

Washington, April 22.—President Cleveland has forwarded the following letter to Hon. Chauncy F. Black, president of the National Association of Democratic Clubs.

I have carefully read the communication you lately placed in my hands setting forth the future purposes and present need of the National Association of Democratic Clubs. The achieyements of this organization should be familiar to all who are interested in the continuation of Democratic supremacy, and should enlist the encouragement of those who appreciate the importance of any effective dissemination of political doctrine. Your association has done much by way of educating our people touching the particular subjects which are recognized as belonging to the Democratic faith; but it seems to me that its best service has been an enforcement and demonstration of the fact that our party is best organised and most powerful when it instead of spoils, and that it quickly responds to the stimulus supplied by an enlistment in the people's cause. This acknowlegement of the important services rendered to the advancement of true Democracy suggests that the National Association of Democratic Clubs and every other Democratic organization should labor unceasingly and earnestly to save our party in this, its time of power and responsibility, from the degredation and disgrace of a failure to redeem the pledges upon which our fellow countrymen entrusted us with the control of their government. All who are charged, on behalf of the Democratic party, with the redemption of these pledges should now be impressively reminded that as we won our way to victory under the banner of tariff reform, so our insistance upon that principle is the condition of our retention of the people's trust; and that fealty to party oganization demands the subordination of individual advantages and wishes and the putting aside of petty and ignoble jealousies and bickerings, when party principles and party integrity and party existance are at stake. I cheerfully enclose a contribution to the funds necessary to carry on the good work of your organization, with a hearty wish for its continual success and usefulness. Yours very truly,

STRIVES FOR PRINCIPLE'S

GROVER CLEVELAND

Coxey's Army.

Fate was unkind indeed to Citizen J. S. Coxey of Massillon, O., in the sendoff she gave his army when he raised the cry of "On to Washington!" and started with his host to take the capital. She gave him two snowstorms to begin and cold weather enough to chill the morrow and freeze out the courage of all but a leader as brave as Coxey.

Various political schemes have been charged upon Coxey by the so called plutocratic press. Wicked goldbugs and others have not hesitated to say that a demand for silver coinage was the concealed African in the wood pile of this army of the unemployed. But Citizen Coxey says no. He vows by all that is good and great that he only means a move in the interest of the Good Roads association and of the unemployed millions of the United States. We will go to Washington in a peaceful, dignified manner, says this leader. We will petition Congress to issue $25,000,000, more or less, of national scrip and set the unemployed to work at making good roads throughout all the Union. That, in brief, is the plan.

The originator of the scheme thinks he sees in it a way to get decent highways throughout the length and breadth of our land and give food to the hungry. As to the need of great public highways advocated in this queer manner, there is no question. Property would be worth many millions more if we had as good roads as France has, for instance.

It may be mentioned, by the way, that the roads of France were built in exactly this way for the purpose of feeding the hungry and silencing their murmurs of discontent. An American, Mr. Joseph R. Buchanan, who has given considerable thought to the subject in earnest, declares that part of Coxey's scheme is not so very wild. Suppose, he says, Congress should issue legal tender notes for the purpose of roadmaking. The individual states would be more interested than the national government in the roads. If they should agree to pay every year, of the amount expended in the bonds of each state, say, 1 per cent each, the roads could be constructed, and the national government would not feel the expense. The added value of the property along the improved highways would give the indiyidual states so much increased annual revenue that they would not feel the expense either. — Midway News.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 20, 1894.

The more one studies the work of the democratic Senators the more apparent it becomes that they need a leader. There is too much guerilla fighting. Single leadership is as necessary in politics as in an army, if results are to be accomplished. It may please the personal friends of a Senator for him to strike out on his own hook and make a brilliant attack on a party measure, but the example is fatal to party harmony, as it is always followed by those who never would have attempted to lead such a movement. It is not necessary that a leader shall have more ability than any of his followers. All that is needed is that one man shall be recognized as leader. The full significance of this will be plain to any democrat who will take the trouble to ask half a dozen Democratic Senators to name the democratic leader of the Senate and note the number named. Now there may be a dozen leading democratic Senators, but there should be and can be only one real leader at a time. If the democratic Senators had one recognized leader the party would be spared the spectacle of the uncertainty now surrounding the tariff bill. Of course every democrat knows that the senate is going to pass a tariff bill, but there is no man who can now say just what sort of a bill it will be when it is passed. This situation, with a clear democratic majority in the Senate, is humiliating to every democrat and should not be possible and would not be if the democratic Senators were organized as good party men should be. The attempt to saddle a part of the responsibility for this unfortunate state of affairs upon President Cleveland fools no one who is conversant with the attitude the president occupies towards the senate. His skirts are clear.

Senator Smith, of New Jersey, added his voice to that of Senator Hill in attacking the income tax and other parts of the tariff bill, in a set speech delivered in the senate this week. After stating his reasons for opposing the income tax and other schedules of the bill, Mr. Smith said: "But in justice to my party, my State and myself, I cannot leave any room for misapprehension. The democratic party is under a distinct obligation to confer the boon of tariff reform upon the American people. We cannot hope to overcome the present dissentions and fulfill this obligation unless we beat down all attempts to create discord within the ranks and strive earnestly for party harmony." Mr. Smith has doubtless heard the story of the eleven obstinate jurors. His plea for party hsrmony recalled it to many of his hearers.

Owing to a press of other business the senate failed to vote on the Chinese treaty this week, and Senator Morgan, who as chairman of the committee on Foreign Relations has charge of it, having sometime ago made arrangements which necessitated his paying a visit to Alabama about this time, asked that its further consideration be postponed until May 3, which was agreed to by the Senate. From the best obtainable information there seems to be no doubt of the ratification of the treaty by much more than the required two-thirds vote.

There has been lots of talk here about the production of evidence showing that the Navy Department did not find out all of the "snide" business connected with the making of armor plates by the Carnegie company, but up to this time nothing new has been placed before Secretary Herbert although he has been ready and even anxious to get hold of anything new in that line.

Fortyseven democrats in the House stood out to the last and voted against the adoption of the rule for counting a quorum, but its adoption was inevitable, and, as long as it seemed impossible to keep a democratic quorum on hand it is perhaps just as well. There will be no more deadlocks during this session. That is much to be thankful for. The republicans are pretending to be much pleased over the adoption of the rule, but as a matter of fact they are not. It ends their ability to make trouble whenever they pleased, and for that reason is disliked by them. It is not probable that the new rule will be put in force often. Its existence will be all that is needed to make a voting quorum, as a rule.

It seems a little like putting the cart before the horse to follow the quorum-counting rule with the enforcement of the old law docking the pay of members of the House for the time they are absent without leave, except on account of sickness either of themselves or in their families, but it is to be done. Perhaps if this law had been enforced from the beginning of the session there would have been no necessity for a quorum-counting rule. It might have kept a democratic quorum on the floor of the House.

WASHINGTON, April 25.—The House committee by an overwhelming vote decided today to sidetrack the Meyer silver seigniorage and small bonds bill, and instead to consider the Bland free silver coinage bill.

Binding Twine.

Henry Wolfer, warden of the penitentiary, at Stillwater has sent out a lot of samples of the prison made binding twine. The twine is of hemp, grown in Minnesota, Iowa and Kentucky, mostly. Mr. Wolfer says:

"This twine will be sold the present season at a price not to exceed 7 cents per pound, and lower, if necessary, to meet competition of any twine of any length and quality that may be placed on the market, said price to be finally determined by the Board of Managers June 1, 1894. All the purchasers of twine previous to that date will be entitled to the benefit of any reductions below seven cents that may be made by the Board. There need, therefor, be no hesitancy in placing orders now, as the prices will be adjusted as above indicated." Farmers who will need twine this fall, if they like the twine, will do well to place their orders in time. Call and get a sample at the GAZETTE office. We have a full ball for examination. 26tf

IT seems that the Sunday night entertainments recently so popular in London are beginning to pall upon those for whom they were intended. Out of five clubs which used to give orchestral or other concerts on Sunday nights in the west end only one remains. The Sunday discussions upon theatrical matters are also, it is alleged, not nearly so well supported as the Thursday night smoking concerts.

They have ceased, however, to be a terror, for their enemies include every species of birds from fly catchers to hawks, the chipmunks and squirrels, and last but not least the fisherman, who finds in them the ideal bait.

THE STRIKE.

Gov. Nelson Proposes Arbitration as a Solution.

Mr. Hill Accepts but the Employes do not Feel Favorably Disposed Toward the Proposition. A Few Passenger Trains Running.

MINNEAPOLIS, April 25.—A committee composed of about 100 employes of the Great Northern met in St. Paul yesterday. Vice President Howard was selected as chairman of the committee and President Debs was on the floor a great deal of the time. Both he and Howard were epen advocates of arbitration. One St. Paul delegate said that he was instructed against compromise, and that he could not vote otherwise unless a meeting of his union was held and his instructions changed. The Montana men were in a like frame of mind.

A letter was addressed to Mr. Hill, asking if he would meet a committee of employes.

Mr. Hill replied that he would meet his men at 30 minutes' notice.

Although Debs in his letter does not say that the committee has refused arbitration, there seems to be no doubt that they did. The committee were under instructions not to talk. If they dont desire arbitration, their only mission can be to obtain the schedules which they have been asking for from the outset.

The tenor of President J. J. Hill's letter implies that this committee will have some trouble in showing who and what it represents. There is no doubt but the A. R. U. will make a determined fight for recognition as an organization. If the A. R. U. is recognized it will claim the right to make a shedule for everybody from the engineers to the trackmen.

So far as Minneapolis is concerned, the Great Northern's train service showed considerable of an improvement yesterday over Monday and a number of trains were sent out on time, although none went farther west than the Montana border. Train No. 1, bound for Barnesville and Minot, left about an hour later than its usual time, which is 8:30, while train No. 9 over the Breckenridge for Neche, scheduled to leave at 8:40, was held until 9:50. Both trains carried United States deputy marshals, who will accompany the trains to their destination and return with them. No. 4, from Willmar, arrived at 10:25 yesterday morning on time, having come by the way of St. Cloud. Eight deputy marshals were on board and reported everything quiet at Willmar and St. Cloud, as well as other points along the line. No freight trains were moving yesterday. Trains Nos. 3 and 9, one of which is the coast train, were sent out last night. This morning train No. 7 will leave Minneapolis at 8:30 for the boundary line, by way of Breckenridge. No. 1 will go to Minot, as usual.

Everything was very quiet among the railroad men in Minneapolis yesterday, all of those not at work having gone to St. Paul, where the conference was being held. No trouble of any sort is now looked for in Minneopolis unless the unexpected happens and the company and its employes fail to reach any sort of an agreement.

ST. PAUL, April 24.—At midnight last night Deputy United States Marshall Sheehan, accompanied by Ed. L. Warren and five special marshals, arrived here from Barnesville with nine strikers in their custody, all of whom were arrested for interfering with trains contrary to the injunction.

GRAND FORKS, N. D., April 24.—There was quite an exciting time here late last night when Deputy United States Marshal Cronan arrested one of the strikers, a fireman named Redding, for attempting to uncouple a train. A mob of over 200 men followed the deputy marshal and his men to the police station demanding Redding's release, throwing chunks of mud and breaking windows all along the route to the police station. Both the officers and the mob made emphatic threats of shooting. Redding was examined this morning and held to await the action of the grand jury.

Gov. Nelson's Proposition.

MINNEAPOLIS, April 24.—The only change in the situation of the strike yesterday was the proposition for arbitration to settle the existing trouble. Gov. Nelson addressed letters to J. J. Hill, of the Great Northern, and Eugene V. Debs, president of the A. R. U., suggesting a committee to whom the trouble should be referred for settlement. President Hill replied agreeably and proposed a committee of three, the railway company to appoint one member, the railway employes one, and these two to name the third. In case the two members could not agree upon the third, then Judges Nelson and Thomas, of the United States courts to name the third member. President Debs replied in a favorable tone, but announced that the authority for official acceptance was lodged with the committee representing the men, which was expected to arrive in St. Paul today.

The majority of yesterday's mail trains went out on time, and reports received last night from points along the line indicated that the trains were running nearly on time as far west as the Montana border. No attempt was made yesterday to move accommodation or freight trains.

Two Babies Murdered.

TUSCOGEE, Ala., April 25.—Mrs. George Sinclair left her home for a short visit and on her return found her two little girls, aged 2 and 6 years, missing. A search resulted in the discovery of their dead bodies in the woods near the house, with their heads battered in. The little ones had wandered from the house and been murdered. In a millpond near by was found the body of Horace Johnson, an insane negro, who, it is supposed, met the little ones, murdered them and then jumped into the pond and drowned himself.

Charged with Embezzlement.

NEW YORK, April 25.—William Lohman, former cashier of the excise department of Brooklyn, was arrested at Toronto, Ont., at noon Sunday charged in the warrant with the embezzlement of $30,000 from the city. He was held on a telegram from Brooklyn police officials. He admitted the embezzlement of $19,400.

A Millionaire Passes Away.

NEW YORK, April 25.—Edward Reed, for many years a carpet manufacturer at Albany, died at his home in Brick Church, N. J. He was 72 years of age and left an estate valued at $2,000,000.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

W. B. of M.

The state convention at Northfield of the Women's Board of Missions voted to accept Miss Moulton, of Carlton college, as the state W. B. M. I. missionary. Miss Moulton graduates from Carlton this year, and will commence work immediately thereafter.

An interesting paper on "The World's Fair and Missions," by Miss E. M. Buxton, of Minneapolis, closed the forenoon session. The first thing of importance in the closing session was the Young People's hour, which consisted of the stories of the young missionaries who have gone forth to foreign fields from Minnesota. The officers elected for the ensuing year were as follows:

President, Miss M. J. Evans, of Northfield; vice president, Mrs. C. F. Sawyer, Minneapolis; secretary, Mrs. A. H. Pearson, Northfield; assistant secretary, Miss Alice Demon, Minneapolis; field secretary, Miss Emily Hartwell; treasurer, Miss J. F. Jackson, St. Paul.

The next meeting will be held at Sauk Rapids.

To Break a Monopoly.

The monopoly which the A. Booth company has of the fishing industry on the upper part of Lake Superior will be broken this year, and by the fishermen. The Booth company this year, they claim, refused to make its customary contract for the season, which has not only cut down the price, but will agree to take only such portion of the fish caught as they wished. The fishermen have entered a sort of co-operative organization, and M. F. Kulmbach will handle their catch. Mr. Kulmbach was formerly at the head of the Northern Fresh Fish company, which was absorbed by the Booth company, and he contracted to not engage in the fish business on Lake Superior for five years. This limit has just expired.

"After the Ball."

Rainy Lake City has had her first dance, and it was pronounced by all who participated in the festivities a huge success. There was nothing of the "stag party" about it, even if the town did spring into existence in a day. There are several comely and accomplished young women in the gold district metropolis, and enough more came over with their escorts from Fort Francis to make it an easy matter to fill out the sets.

Prison Population.

The arrival of four prisoners at Stillwater brought the prison population up to 500 for the first time in its history. Before the large number of United States prisoners arrived from the South a year ago, 350 inmates was considered a large number, but it will probably go quite a ways above 500 when all the prisoners who are now in the jails of this state awaiting trial arrive.

News in Brief.

The postoffices of Lone Tree Lake, Brown county, and Otter Tail City, have been changed to Lone tree and Otter Tail.

Grant Bates, arrested at Fergus Falls, was brought to St. Cloud on a charge of bastardy preferred by a 16-year-old girl, Annie Oertler, of Avon, where Bates until recently worked as an operator for the Great Northern, being discharged a short time ago and returned to his home at Fergus Falls. ## DAWN AND DEATH.

DAWN.

Time after time, a mystery divine,
The nameless wonder of the dawn, we see
Stealing o'er heaven and earth so silently,
With touch so gentle and so infinite fine,
No subtlest sense could find and mark the line
When the first gleam of breaking day, set free
Even from the night itself, shall come to be
More than a paler dark, where faintly shine
The stars of heaven. But clearer and more clear,
Slowly a thousand things come forth to sight,
And forms and tints half hidden, far and near,
Melt from gray shadow into amber light,
Till from its ever-swelling streams are born
The full-flushed splendors of the perfect morn.

DEATH.

Even thus some day, insensibly and slow
As grows that radiance, mayhap we shall see
That time is merged into eternity:
Even while we watched and waited, come to know
That we have died—what they call death be low—
Passed from the earth painless and peacefully,
As men lie down to sleep, and wake to be
What they were yesterday, while all things show
Familiar round them. Only with that morn
Shall on us break a fuller consciousness,
Such sense of deeper life and light be born,
It must with joy ineffable possess
The soul immortal, now to hold its way,
Untrammeled thus, through God's resplendent day.

—Stuart Sterne, in Century.

JOBY PAID HIS FARE.

And Won a Home and a Friend at the Same Time.

The stout ship Falcon, leaning gallantly to the wind, was making her way down the channel, bound for America. The sails had been reefed, the cables coiled, and everything made snug for the night. Capt. Essex, pleased, as an old sailor always is when his vessel is well away from the dangers of the land, and making good progress under a steady wind, paced to and fro on his quarter deck, gruffly humming a little song, the greater part of which was lost in his thick, bushy beard, though now and then you might have caught some words, as "The sea is the place for me, my lads," or "A lively ship and a willing crew."

Capt. Essex's little song was interrupted by a sudden commotion in the forward part of the vessel. There was a sound of loud, angry talking, a hasty scuffling of feet, followed by the frightened sobbing of a child.

"Hello!" exclaimed Capt. Essex, "what is the meaning of that row?"

"A stowaway, sir," answered one of the men from below.

"A stowaway on my ship!" growled the captain. "Bring the rascal here! We'll give him a taste of the rope's end first, and then—but what is that?"

"The stowaway, sir," was the response as two of the crew approached, leading between them a very small and very ragged boy.

The anger in the captain's face gave place to a look of astonishment, mingled with pity, as his eyes rested upon the shivering form of the intruder. But he maintained the sternness of his tone as he addressed the boy.

"Well," said he, "what are you doing here?"

"N-nothing, sir," was the trembling reply.

"Who are you and where did you come from? Speak up, now! No nonsense!"

"I'm Joby—Job Oliver, sir," said the boy, between sobs, which he vainly endeavored to choke down. "I live in London by the docks, sir."

"What are you doing here, then?"

"I—I hid away down below, and—and they found me. I wasn't doing anything. I didn't touch a thing. I thought they wouldn't mind. I'm not very big, you see, and I don't weigh much."

He broke down with a gasp and pressed his small, grimy fists into his streaming eyes. Then, as the captain remained silent, but continued to gaze at him with a tremendous frown, he made a brave effort to go on with his story.

"I haven't any mother or father, you see, and I have to earn my own living. Everybody says: 'He's too small. What's he good for?' and they don't take me, though I am strong. I can lift a trunk—a little one. I can run errands very fast, but everybody says: 'Oh, he's too ragged and too dirty.' If I could get jobs, you see, I could get me a new suit of clothes, but everybody don't want me, and—"

Here a fresh storm of sobs shook the small frame.

"But you haven't told me yet what you are doing on this ship?" said the captain, preserving his severity with an effort.

"The ship was going to America," answered the boy. "Everybody is rich in America. Everybody wants you there, you see. Tom Dixey went there, and he makes a load of money."

"That's all very well," responded the captain, "but people who go to America pay for their passage, and to hide away so as to go without paying is just the same as stealing so much money."

Evidently the boy had never taken that view of the question. He looked up at the captain's stern face with a frightened and startled expression. Then he began a hurried search in the pockets of his ragged jacket. From one he drew forth two coppers, from another a silver sixpence and from a third a shilling, much battered, chipped and defaced. These he held out toward the captain.

"This is all I've got now. I earned the sixpence and the two pennies—the shilling a gentleman gave me. It's broken, but it is good silver, all the same."

"And what am I to do with these?" asked the captain.

"To pay my fare," replied the boy. "It's 'most enough, I think. I will earn the rest soon when I get over there."

The good captain could maintain his gravity no longer. A smile lighted up his rugged features as he said, kindly:

"There, there, Joby, keep your money, my boy. You are an honest little fellow, after all. You shall stay with me on the Falcon, and we will make a man of you."

All day long the good ship labored with the mountainous waves, leaping and plunging till it seemed as though the groaning, creaking masts must come out of her. But she was a stanch, well-built craft, and had passed safely through many a worse tempest.

With the fall of the night the gale increased in violence. The sails had been reduced to the heavy lower canvas, just sufficient to steady the vessel. The captain remained on deck, taking a position near the rail, where he could keep an eye on the rigging. Near him, sheltered by the bulwarks, sat little Joby on a coil of rope.

Suddenly, just as the captain was shouting an order through his trumpet, a vast billow seemed to rise out of the gloom and bear down upon the ship. It struck the vessel's side with an awful roar, throwing tons of water on the deck. Before he could save himself the captain was lifted from his feet and flung overboard into the sea.

Almost at the same instant a small figure was seen to leap upon the rail, cling there a moment, and then leap outward into the darkness and disappear.

"Man overboard!"

The terrible cry rang above the roar of the tempest. For a moment all was panic and confusion. Then, under the mate's command, the ship was rounded to, with her head to the wind, and a boat ordered to be lowered.

"No use," said one of the men to the mate, who stood by the rail near where the captain had fallen overboard. "We could never find them in the daytime, let alone such a night as this."

"I am afraid not," answered the mate sadly. "Poor old man! Poor boy! Hark! What was that?"

"Falcon, ahoy!" The shout came long and strong from the darkness, not twenty yards from where the ship lay.

"The captain!" cried a dozen glad voices.

"Belay your jaw there, ye lubbers! Tail on that line and haul us aboard, or we'll be adrift."

Line! Us! What could he mean? But the mate had already discovered a curious thing—a light but strong rope, fastened to a ring in the bulwark and extending outward in the darkness toward the spot whence the captain's voice proceeded. It was drawn tight, as if some heavy burden were towing at the end of it.

In an instant sturdy arms were pulling at it with a will. Then a stout rope was lowered, and up it like a monkey scrambled Joby, followed more slowly by Capt. Essex.

Then a great cheer went up, drowning the roar of the storm itself, as the crew gathered about the dripping forms of the captain and his little friend. A few words served to explain what had happened.

Joby, with his eye on the captain, had seen him carried overboard. He knew that one end of the coil of light, though strong rope upon which he sat was secured to the bulwark, for he had tied the knot himself that very day. Without pausing to think of his own danger, he took the free end of the rope between his teeth and was in the water nearly as soon as the captain himself.

Though he could swim like a duck, he was borne helplessly along on the crest of the waves almost into the arms of Capt. Essex, who caught him as he was sweeping by. The captain fastened the line about both of their bodies, and partly swimming and partly towed by the ship they had managed to keep their heads above the water until the Falcon was hove to.

The storm blew itself out during the night, and the next morning dawned clear and calm. All the forenoon Joby was observed to be very grave and silent, as if he were pondering some important question. Finally he presented himself before the captain in the cabin.

"Well, my boy," said the captain, "what can I do for you?"

"A man's life is worth a good deal of money, isn't it?" asked Joby, twirling his cap nervously as he spoke. "Not a boy like me, but a grown man."

"Yes, of course, my lad," replied the captain. "A man's life is supposed to be the most valuable of his possessions."

"Well, then," said Joby, twirling his cap still more nervously, "they say I saved your life last night. I don't say it was much, you see. Any fellow who could swim could do the same thing, only I happened to do it."

"Yes, you certainly did it, Joby. And what then?"

"You see—you see," stammered Joby, "I—I thought that would pay for my passage. Then it wouldn't be stealing, you know."

Joby could not make out why the captain's honest eyes should suddenly grow moist, nor why the captain's right arm almost squeezed the breath out of his small body, nor yet why the captain's voice should be so husky as he said:

"Joby, my lad, while old Tom Essex's hulk holds together, and a single timber of him floats, you shall never want for a berth or be without a friend."—London Tid-Bits.

Cure for Baldness.

Perhaps the oldest medical prescription in existence is one which has lately been deciphered by a professor of Cambridge university, in England, on a papyrus taken from an Egyptian tomb. It bears evidence that it was intended, not for some bald-headed male Egyptian, but for the mother of a king of the first dynasty, who must have reigned about four thousand years before Christ. The prescription is as follows:

"Dog's paws (the calloused portion) .... 1 part.
Dates..... 1 "
Donkeys' hoofs..... 1 "
"Boil the whole in oil and rub the scalp actively with the mixture."

Egyptian history does not say whether the queen dowager regained her lost hair. The remedy does not seem to recommend itself readily to bald people of the present day; but there is no telling what these people will not use in the endeavor to "start their hair out again."—Youth's Companion.

Discouraging Study.

The case of the honest Irish servant who could never understand why his master perpetually required him to wash his chaise, since he went directly out and muddied it up again, is paralleled by an actual reply by a dull boy to an examiner in a French school.

The pupil had passed a wretched examination in French history.

"What do you mean by this?" asked the instructor. "Why don't you study your history?"

"What's the use?" drawled the pupil; "they're never going to get it finished. They're making it now!"—Boston Herald.

—Sir Isaac Newton's treatise on "Optics" attracted no attention in his own country until it had made a profound sensation in France.

FIRESIDE FRAGMENTS.

—Fried Apples.—Wipe the apples and slice thin. Have bacon fat hot in the skillet; put in the apples and sprinkle a little sugar over them; some add a little water. Fry brown. A nice breakfast dish.—Housekeeping.

—Potato Fritters.—One pint of cooked potato cubes, one-half pint of milk, two eggs, season with salt and pepper; stir in flour enough to make a stiff batter and fry in boiling lard the same as corn fritters.—Farm and Fireside

—Berry Balls.—Roll out biscuit dough, cut in squares, put a spoonful of berries on, bring corners together, place on a buttered tin. Melt one tablespoonful of butter, one heaping spoonful of sugar, one-half cupful of hot water. Dip over the squares. Sprinkle with sugar, and bake.—Good Housekeeping.

—Auntie's Apple Pies.—Steam until tender six good-sized, tart apples, rub through a colander, and stir in, while they are hot, one tablespoonful of butter; when cool, stir in the yolks of three eggs, the rind and juice of one lemon, and one teacupful of sugar, beaten well together. Bake with one crust in deep pie tins.—Housekeeper.

—Peptik Bread.—Fill a quart measure to within one-eighth of an inch of the top with graham flour, and the rest of white flour. Two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, salt, two teaspoonfuls of sugar. Stir with water till not quite thin enough to pour out. Bake one and one-half hours in a very moderate oven.—Good Housekeeping.

—Rice Muffins.—One pint of milk, one quart of flour, one pint of boiled rice, three eggs, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, one teaspoonful of salt, one of soda, two of cream of tartar. Mix the sugar, salt, soda and cream of tartar with the flour and rub through a sieve. Beat the eggs and add to the milk. Stir gradually into the flour. When it becomes a smooth, light paste, add the rice and beat thoroughly. Bake thirty-five minutes in buttered pans. This quantity will make three dozen muffins.—N. Y. Ledger.

—Cleaning Lace.—An old lacemaker, who has woven many a gossamer web for patterns, and has taught to fashion some of the daintiest patterns which deft fingers delight in doing, gives this simple receipt for lace cleaning: Spread the lace out carefully with calcined magnesia; place another paper over it and put it away between the leaves of a book for two or three days. All it needs is a skillful shake to scatter the white powder and then it is ready for wear, with tender threads intact and as fresh as when it was new.—Christian Inquirer.

—Brown Betty.—A gentleman recently remarked on hearing this name that he did not know what it was. If made by the following recipe, he would certainly have relished it: Pare and core a dozen large, juicy apples. Chop fine with a hash-knife. Butter a deep pudding dish, place first a layer of chopped apples, some bits of butter strewed over them. Then sprinkle with white sugar, flavor with nutmeg, lemon essence, or the juice and a little of the rind of a lemon. Next a layer of bread crumbs, then a layer of apples, and so on till the dish is full, finishing with a layer of bread crumbs. Send it to the table hot or cold, and eat with cream sauce.—Western Rural.

DRESSES FOR CHILDREN.

How to Fit Out a Little Girl For the Summer Cheaply and Well.

A little girl needs ten or twelve dresses. Get two or three of brown linen strictly for morning wear. This wears and washes beautifully, and shows the dirt less than any other material. It can be bought for twenty-five cents a yard, and three yards will make a dress, and a sash of the same put in from the seams under the arms. Make it very simply, with a short yoke and full sleeves. The small red and white and blue and white check ginghams at twenty-five cents a yard make nice morning dresses, made in the same simple way. Very pretty percales can be bought for twelve and a half cents a yard. They wash well, and come in pretty blue and pink stripes and dots and little flowered patterns. Made with a waist either full or plain, extending about three inches below the armholes, and with full ruffles of the same material cut on the bias, and edged with a little narrow embroidery, starting from the middle of the waist in front, and going over the shoulder, they make a very pretty and reasonable dress for either morning or afternoon. It is nice to have four of this kind; three yards of material make one. If you want it a little more dressy, make the ruffle entirely of white embroidery three or four inches wide, and vary the pattern by putting the ruffle around instead of bringing it to a point front and back. India linen at thirty cents a yard, or nainsook for the same price make nice white dresses.

These can be made to wear with guimpes if preferred. Cut the dress low necked, and put a deep ruffle of embroidery to fall all around the neck, and a short puff sleeve to the elbow. A yard and a half of embroidery is required to trim in this way. Great bargains can often be found in remnants. A small-dotted muslin makes a pretty change, trimmed with lace instead of embroidery; but the lace rarely looks well after a few washings. Simplicity is the principal thing to remember, for it saves in money, time and washing, and the child will look twice as well. A short double-breasted coat made of French flannel for every-day wear is a very important thing. This cannot be bought much under three dollars and a half, and look nice, but can be made with one and a half yards of flannel at seventy-five cents a yard. A fine brown and white stripe is a serviceable color, and the great advantage of the French flannel is that it washes so well. A best coat is also needed. Very often one has just the right material in a dress that is no longer of use. A coat can quite easily be cut from the skirt of a dark red or blue or white serge dress. Make it with a big double-breasted collar and large white buttons, and it will surely have an air of its own. A white leghorn is a pretty best hat, trimmed with a bunch of daisies and a big white bow, and can be gotten up for about two dollars and a quarter.—Harper's Bazar.

"Isn't Willie Wibbles a terribly poor conversationalist?" said Maud.

"Yes," replied Mamie; "but he is ever so much better now than he used to be."

"I wonder what the cause is?"

"He has such a cold he can hardly speak above a whisper."—Washington Star.

AN ILLINOIS MIRACLE.

A Case of Deep Interest to Women Everywhere.

Saved Through a Casual Glance at a Newspaper—Weak, Pale and in a Deplorable Condition When Relief Came—A Remarkable Narrative Carefully Investigated by a Dubuque Times Reporter.

[Dubuque, Iowa, Times.]

Among the peculiar conditions with which the people of the present age are endowed is a remarkable capacity for doubting. The Times determined upon a thorough investigation into a medical case out in Savannah, Ill., as a matter of news, with the result that the case was even more remarkable than the public had been given to understand.

Mrs. Kenyon was a good talker and told the story in a terse way as follows:

"I was born in Warren county, New York, thirty-three years ago. I was married when I was nineteen and came to Savannah seven years ago. With the exception of being at times subject to violent sick headaches, I considered myself a healthy woman up to five years ago. At that time I was very much run down and an easy prey to the ever present malaria in and about the Mississippi bottom lands. I was taken violently ill. The local physicians said I was affected by malaria and intermittent fever. I continually grew weaker and finally went to see Dr. McVey, of Clinton, Iowa, who is reputed to be one of the ablest physicians in the Mississippi valley. He treated me for a time without beneficial effects. I then consulted a prominent doctor of Savannah. My stomach would not retain the medicine he gave me and he came to the conclusion that my stomach was badly diseased. Occasionally I would choke down and nearly suffocate. I then went to Dr. Maloney and he pronounced it a case of heart trouble. He helped me only temporarily. All this time I had grown weaker and paler until I was in a deplorable condition. I had a continual feeling of tiredness, my muscular power was nearly gone, and I could not go up half a dozen steps without resting, and often that much exercise would cause me to have a terrible pain in my side. Seemingly the blood had left my veins. I was pale as death; my lips were blue and cold and I had given up all hope of ever getting better. My husband insisted that I should take some of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. When these had been used I was somewhat improved in health. I continued their use and felt I was growing stronger, my sleep refreshed me and it seemed as if I could feel new blood coursing through my veins. I kept on taking Pink Pills until a short time ago and now I consider myself a healthy, rugged woman. My house is full of boarders and I superintend all the work myself. In other words, I work all the time and am happy all the time. I am positive that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People saved my life, and I believe there are thousands of women who could find great relief if they used them. The sick headaches I was subject to from girlhood have disappeared, and I have not had a single attack since I commenced taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

One of her neighbors said: "Mrs. Kenyon's recovery is something marvelous. She was reduced to a mere shadow, and was the palest and most ghost-like person I had ever seen. If miracles are not performed in these days I would be pleased to know how to describe a case of this kind."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, it seems, contain in a condensed form all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood, and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of the grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, that tired feeling resulting from nervous prostration; all diseases resulting from vitiated humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities, and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood and restore the glow of health to pale or sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork, or excesses of whatever nature.

These Pills are manufactured by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., and Brockville, Ont., and are sold in boxes at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and are never sold in bulk.

BATHS AND BACILLI.

Take Care of One So That the Other May Find No Entrance.

The microbe and the bacillus are of more terror to the modern housekeeper than dust by the pound used to be to the old-fashioned one, and a rule for disinfecting sinks is more appreciated in these days than a whole volume of recipes for angels' cake was in the days of old. Hence every woman will be more than interested in—she will be profoundly grateful for—the suggestions herein made.

In the ideal house, of course, drains may be laid and ventilators adjusted so that even the most stubborn of maids can circumvert their use. But most houses still lack a little of the ideal. Bathrooms are not done in pale green tiles and white marble, but zinc and plaster still hold their own. To make these endurable enamel and varnished paper must be used. The moment the inside of the bath becomes steamed and chipped it should be re-enameled by an expert. The bath should be scrubbed first with strong soda and water, and then the first coat of enamel should be applied, of course when the bath itself is absolutely and entirely dry; then, after two days, another coat should be given, and then, after twenty-four hours more, the bath should be filled with cold water, which should be left in for another similar space; then give one more coat of enamel and allow it to thoroughly dry and harden, and you have an absolutely perfect "job," and one any maid or boy could manage quite well.

Varnished paper is the best substitute for tiled walls yet known to lean purses. But even where the best sort of materials have been used only the best sort of care will insure a really clean and sweet room. The moment a bathroom is left the second housemaid should go into it, dry the bath thoroughly, hang up the blankets on a long brass rail provided for the purpose, and she should also take back the towels to the room of that individual who has had the bath, for, of course, these should be kept distinct to each person, and no permanent towel or piece of soap should ever be allowed there. She should then open the window top and bottom to allow all steam to escape. No draperies are allowed in the perfect bathroom, but the windows are filled with cathedral glass in leaded squares, or, better still, in a less formal pattern.

Kitchen pipes and drains seldom need the attention of a plumber, but do need the daily use of hot water and soda. And all houses in which pipes are not arranged according to the most scientific and sanitary of principles should have the windows of every room partly open all the time. Fresh air is the deadliest foe of the bacillus, and three inches open at the top of a window in every room may prevent typhoid fever. —N. Y. World.

Another Big Building.

The phenomenal success of Dr. Ward's Remedies has obliged the proprietors The J. R. Watkins Medical Company, at Winona, Minn., to build another laboratory in addition to their already large establishment, making the total area of floor space in the neighborhood of twenty thousand square feet. The entire plant has a total capacity of turning out about one million dollars' worth of medicines a year. It is here where the great blood remedy, Dr. Ward's Gen-De-Can-Dra for the Blood is manufactured. You have no doubt noticed the advertisements of this justly celebrated medicine, which have been running for some months in our columns.

Besides Dr. Ward's Gen-De-Can-Dra for the Blood The J. R. Watkins Medical Company are owners of a full line of household remedies, all known as "Dr. Ward's," which words they have had registered in the U. S. Patent Office, as their trade mark, both with and without the black line drawn through them thus ———. No one but the above named Company has a right to use this name, or anything that sounds very much like it, in connection with the sale of any proprietary or patent medicine. These remedies have been on the market more than twenty-five years, have stood the test of time, and have given satisfaction to millions. If you want "Ward's" insist upon having them, and before buying, see that the above trade mark is blown in the bottle, with the name and address of the sole proprietors, The J. R. Avoid all baking powders sold with a gift or prize, or at a lower price than the Royal, as they invariably contain alum, lime or sulphuric acid, and render the food unwholesome.

If the following letters had been written by your best known and most esteemed neighbors they could be no more worthy of your confidence than they now are, coming, as they do, from well known, intelligent, and trustworthy citizens, who, in their several neighborhoods, enjoy the fullest confidence and respect of all who know them. The subject of the above portrait is a well known and much respected lady, Mrs. John G. Foster, residing at No. 33 Chapin Street, Canandaigua, N. Y. She writes to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Chief Consulting Physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute at Buffalo, N. Y., as follows: "I was troubled with eczema, or salt-rheum, seven years. I doctored with a number of our home physicians and received no benefit whatever. I also took treatment from physicians in Rochester, New York, Philadelphia, Jersey City, Binghamton, and received no benefit from them. In fact I have paid out hundreds of dollars to the doctors without benefit. My brother came to visit us from the West and he told me to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. He had taken it and it had cured him. I have taken ten bottles of the 'Discovery,' and am entirely cured, and if there should be any one wishing any information I would gladly correspond with them, if they enclose return stamped envelope."

Not less remarkable is the following from Mr. J. A. Buxton, a prominent merchant of Jackson, N. C., who says: "I had been troubled with skin disease all my life. As I grew older the disease seemed to be taking a stronger hold upon me. I tried many advertised remedies with no benefit, until I was led to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. When I began taking it my health was very poor; in fact, several persons have since told me that they thought I had the consumption. I weighed only about 125 pounds. The eruption on my skin was accompanied by severe itching. It was first confined to my face, but afterwards spread over the neck and head, and the itching became simply unbearable. This was my condition when I began taking the 'Discovery.' When I would rub the parts affected a kind of branny scale would fall off.

For a while I saw no change or benefit from taking the 'Discovery,' but I persisted in its use, keeping my bowels open by taking Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, and taking as much outdoor exercise as was possible, until I began to gain in flesh, and gradually the disease released its hold. I took during the year somewhere from fifteen to eighteen bottles of the 'Discovery.' It has now been four years since I first used it, and though not using scarcely any since the first year, my health continues good. My average weight being 155 to 160 pounds, instead of 125, as it was when I began the use of the 'Discovery.' Many persons have reminded me of my improved appearance. Some say I look younger than I did six years ago when I was married. I am now forty-eight years old, and stronger, and enjoy better health than I have ever done before in my life."

Yours truly,
J. A. Buxton.

Thousands bear testimony, in equally strong terms, to the efficacy of this wonderful remedy in curing the most obstinate diseases. It rouses every organ into healthy action, purifies, vitalizes and enriches the blood, and, through it, cleanses and renews the whole system. All blood, skin, and scalp diseases, from a common blotch, or eruption, to the worst scrofula are cured by it. For tetter, salt-rheum, eczema, erysipelas, boils, carbuncles, goitre, or thick neck, and enlarged glands and swellings, it is an unequaled remedy. Virulent, contagious, blood-poison is robbed of its terrors by the "Discovery" and by its persevering use the most tainted system renovated and built up anew.

DELANO DIARY

BUFFALO GAZETTE $1.00 per year.

--Today is the time set apart for Arbor Day. Plant your shade trees.

—Feather renovator will leave on or before May the 7th those wishing work done should attend to it at once.

—The Village Council's advertisement for buyers for ten village bonds of $1,000 each appears in another column.

—Such roads as lead into Delano from Minneapolis, and Watertown are a disgrace to the enterprise of civilized people.

--U. S. Marshall Bede with several deputies were passengers on a west bound train through town Saturday afternoon.

--We are in receipt of a copy of "The Tariff and Administrative Customs Acts of 1890 and the Bill of 1894 as reported to the Senate by the Finance Committee.

—Rev. Wright preached to a well filled house on Sunday evening at the Presbyterian church. Rev. Powell and his congregation of the M. E. Church were in attendance.

—An electric light man and a water works man were in town looking over the prospects for securing the job here, one day this week. The more plans the better pick can be made.

—"The Box of Monkeys" and Brother Bill and Me," from Delano, will appear at Buffalo to night and at Monticello tomorrow night. They will sustain Delano's reputation in that line all right.

—Our citizens who think Coxey's movement for good roads of no consequence need only to drive out the Minneapolis road a couple of miles to become thoroughly converted to any plan that will mend our ways.

Gazette and Weekly St. Paul Globe until May 1, $1.30 Year.

--It is about time to be calling a meeting to make arrangements for Memorial Day if Delano expects to keep up her reputation for the observance of the National holiday in an appropriate manner.

—Several baseball clubs have been organized so soon this spring and the boys are getting up their muscle. Some of the boys say the girls could organize a nine that would not be last on the list.

—Garden plowing in the village commenced Monday morning. A good garden comes handy in its season, and several of our citizens propose to take advantage of their opportunities to have a supply of fresh vegetables in the near future.

—School Notes has changed editors, Miss. Grace O'Hair and Ed Freeman retiring, while Vernon Wilder and Emery Cunningham take up the quill. It is to be hoped they will get their productions to the printing office in time to give them a proof reading.

--The roads are quite muddy since the last big rain, but they seem to dry up uncommonly fast between showers. Where they have been properly graded and provisions made for the water to run off rather than into the middle of the traveled way they are getting all right.

—On Sunday, while fishing in a creek near home, Henry Liederbaugh aged 23 years received a dangerous wound from a shot gun, in the hands of a companion who attempted to hand him a spear to spear a fish with and for the instaent forgetting that he had his gun cocked. The shot took effect in Henry's abdomen, a few being scattered up to the right shoulder and onto the thigh and on the right hand and arm. The wound was received it an oblique direction the shot traveling under the skin rather than penetrating the abdominal cavity. It is hoped that no shot reached the cavity, and that he may eventually recover.

—Get your feather beds and pillows renovated before the 7th.

—Rev. Wright is holding protracted meetings at the Presbyterian Church.

—Open air concert by the Delano Cornet Band, Monday evening, in the band stand.

—"A Box of Monkeys" and "Brother Bill and Me" left this morning for Buffalo and Monticello in the interest of the Delano High School.

—The Delano Navigation Company have their steamer loaded on wheels to go to Loverin's, on Lake Independence, when the roads are better.

—Mr. A. E. Powell has gone into the business of cleaning and repairing organs. If you have an organ that needs cleaning, leave your order at this office and it will be promptly attended to.

Price $1.00.

—Councilman Coffin concluded rather suddenly on Wednesday morning quite early, to swap horses, and nearly frightened Recorder Mealey out of a year's growth by rapping on his door to inform him of his determination.

—Pete Wyandoch is having rather a serious time of it this time: Not long since he broke his leg, and a few days ago his father who had some disagreement with him, seems to have taken advantage of his helpless condition, and consequently a lawsuit resulting in the pater familias liquidating a small fine and costs.

—John Hanna has built some new buggy sheds. Wash Rader has built a porch to his residence: and John Rensswick is repairing the old Eagle office. Albert Epple has had his residence nicely painted: and other improvements are being made in the village. It looks as if Delano is going to spring out well after all.

—Mr. A. W. Wittman informs us that some of the citizens are talking of having some of the principle streets with cedar blocks. And that he is corresponding with a capitalist now in Europe concerning a franchise for an electric moter line from the Minneapolis road, near the ford, to Sherry's hill.

What's the matter with running it on to Rockford station to connect with the Soo line?

—The Eagle goes out of the way to criticize us this week for giving the public the fact that there were people in the audience at the School entertainment who objected to having the example of cigarette smoking placed before the children in a school entertainment. The people we meant were ladies and gentlemen who do not go about with an old pipe between their teeth, blowing clouds of smoke into the faces of those who have the right to breathe God's pure air untainted by the fumes of tobacco, opium, hashish or other objectionable things used by some whose manners seem not to have evoluted farther than "the missing link."

NORTH DELANO ITEMS.

North Delanoites are anxiously looking forward to the time when they can come to the station and to do their shopping via the eletric street car line. Since Old Crow has refused to overflow her banks and furnish water for navigable purposes the cars must come next.

A suprise party was held at Mr. Cameron's residence on Saturday evening on the occasion of John's birthday. It is said Alzina played the wedding march.

C. H. Green has rented his house for the summer to Mr. Cameron, and intends to continue residing with his father-in-law. He is engaged in the swine and poultry business to a limited extent.

It is currently reported that editor Joe got his eye, accidently, on a bevy of North Delano young ladies the other day. Prehaps there will be some news from this end of the village in the Eagle once, already.

Miss Addie Cameron is anxiously looking fordward to the time when she would spend the 4th of July in St. Paul.

L. M. Maxfield was seen all dressed up hoeing in the garden last Sunday. Perphaps he was planting flowers on the grave of poor Friskey, Mrs. M's pet cat whose head board bears the inscription, Died April 18 1894.

School Notes.

VERNON WILDER, Editor,
E. CUNNINGHAM, Assis't.

The Senate came to order at 3:15 last Friday, the president pro tem. presiding after the regular business, the senate resolved itself into the committee of the whole and the Hon. Stella Davis took the chair. Senate File No. 11, a bill making dealing in futures a crime punishable by a fine of $1,000 was first taken up, after some debate the bill was returned to the committe for revision. Senate File No. 12 came next, this is a bill repealing the "Woman's suffrage" act passed some time ago. This bill occasioned a great deal of debate, and the discussion of the bill was continued till next session. In this connection we must say that we are very much surprised to note that one of the senators who was once prominent in the ranks of the opposition has come out in favor of "woman suffrage." The senate adjourned 4:15 P. M.

Prof. Geo. B. Aiton, the high school inspector, paid us a visit Wednesday.

On Monday the Botany class took advantage of the fine weather and went out botanizinag mong the specimens found were anemones, bloodroots, and Dutchman's breeches.

Mr. Gutzwiller made us a short call Wednesday forenoon.

Arthur Powell went to Buffalo Wednesday to make arrangements for the plays, from there he will go to Monticello, for the same purpose.

Some of the chemistry class have made their names immortal by etching them on the bell.

Senior, at rehersal:—See how he stares with his ears! He—in short, he stares.

Speaking of strikes, the way one of the high school girls can strike is a caution, she struck one of the boys so hard that he has had a difficulty in breathing ever since.

One of our scholars has such an extensive correspondence that he (or she) is obliged to devote part of the school time to attend to it.

Despite the law against distilling liquors without a license, the chemistry class intend to carry on the manufacture of alcohol, for a day at least. Those wanting a drink, real good, should drink So-and-So's Breakfast Cocoa.

We are not used to quoting Scripture and therefore can not be exact but there is a verse in the New Testiment somewhere, about the mote in your neighbor's eye and the beam in your own which might be read with profit by some people.

County Cullings.

From the dailies we learn that Thomas Walker has superceded J. P. Eull, as Post Master, at St. Michael,s Station.

A little knot of democratic politicians were discussing the situation here the other day ween one of them was heard to say —"Well, Doc. Catlin is the only straight democrat now left in this county, he still believes that tariff is a tax." "Yes," said another, but "he's quit saying so."—Buffalo Journal.

Surely the last speaker was not a GAZETTE reader.

The Waverly Tribune says that Patrick McNeely, Jr., was bound over in the sum of $300 to await the action of the grand jury, at a preliminary hearing in Montrose, on Monday for assaulting Paul Knop with a dangerous weapon, shooting him in the hip where it is reported three grains lodged.

The Buffalo Journal is authority for saying that there will "perhaps" be no contest over the Republican nomination for Auditor and Sheriff. For Superentendent of schools (he hasn't liked Lindsley for a long time) there is likely to be quite a contest. The Journal mentions Professors R. C. Dewey and Willis E. Johnson of Delano as willing to serve; also Prof. Sennett, of Maple Lake, has some backing. To the democrats he gives A. P. Richie, the present Assistant County Superintendent. He seems bent on haying a candidate other than the present incumbent. For County Treasurer we are told that Ole Mattson, of Stockholm, and Charles H. Vorse, of Delano, would be strong; Mr. M., the stronger; but if Mr. McKnight should run again he would make it interesting for either of them. For Register of Deeds, Mr. Podas is the only candidate so far. For Judge of Probate and County Attorney things seem to be in "sort of a catamoos state," there is talk of promoting Judge Alley to a District Judgship, while Tarbox, Latham, and Cutting are to fight it out for something. "Some are in favor of an early convention," From the above rambling remarks it appears that the republicans should hold an early convention; then there is a chance for the wiley Senator, whose term expires this fall to secure Superintendent of Public instruction, Register of Deeds, Treasurer, in case McKnight don't wan't the Democratic nomination, County Attorney, Judge of Probate, or possibly District Judge, Surveyor, or Coroner. Failing in these he can come up before the Legislative convention for his present office, and in case the convention is early enough: about as early as Senator Hill of New York would advise, there might be a chance for Congressman. All Republicans teats being taken the old dodge might be tried and a lot of hungry democrats and disgruntled republicans persuaded to join another "Peoples party movement."

Among Our Exchanges.

There is great excitement at Sacred Heart. Renville County., over the finding of a paint mine on a farm near that town.—Norwood Times.

Mrs. F. E. Briggs has returned from Chicago and she and the children have reoccupied their house corner Seventh and Garroway streets.—Moorhead News.

Rev. Thomas McClary's lecture last Friday night at the Methodist church on "The Mission of Mirth," was very entertaning, and the audience nearly filled the church. Everybody was very well pleased.—Brainard Journal.

The scathing rebuke administered to the traitors in the senate by the Democratic association last week is commended by the democratic newspapers of the state with hardly an exception—pretty good evidence that it expresses the views of the party generally. The republibons naturally are not so well pleased.—Wabasha Democrat.

The appointment of Captain W. H. Harries to the position of Collector of internal revenue is the best appointment that has been made in this state. He was deserving the honor, has the ability to fill the position with marked credit and, moreover, he is a man. More appointments of this character would please the democracy of Minnesota.—St. Peter Herald.

Whangdoodle Donnelly has the right side of the A.P.A. question but is doing that cause no good because he is using it as a mint for coning dollars. People who talk and pretend to know, claim that the affair is a put up job by Whangdoodle D. and Prof. Sims for no other purpose than that of gain. Donnelly must maintain his revenue of ten thousand a year.—St. Peter Herald

JANE JONES.

Jane Jones keeps a-whisperin' to me all the time,
And says: "Why don't you make it a rule
To study your lessons, an' work hard an, learn,
An' never be absent from school?
Remember the story of Elihu Burritt,
How he clum up to the top;
Got all the knowledge 'at he ever had Down in the blacksmithin' shop."
Jane Jones she honestly said it was so:
Mebbe he did—I dunno;
'Course, what's a-keepin' me 'way from the top
Is not never havin' no blacksmithn' shop.

She said 'at Ben Franklin was awfully poor,
But full o' ambition an' brains,
An' studied phylosophy all 'is hul life—
An' see what he got for his pains.
He brought electricity out of the sky
With a kite an' the lightnin' an' key.
So we're owin' him, more'n any one else,
Fer all the bright lights 'at we see.
Jane Jones she actually said it was so;
Mebbe he did—I dunno;
'Course, what's allers been hinderin' me
Is not havin' any kite, lightnin' or key.

Jane Jones said Columbus was out at the knees.
When he first thought up his big scheme;
An' all the Spaniards an' Italians, too,
They laughed, and just said 'twas a dream,
But Queen Isabella she listen'd to him,
An' pawned all her jewels o' worth,
An' bought him the Santa Marier 'nd said:
"Go hunt up the rest of the earth."
Jane Jones she honestly said it was so;
Mebbe he did—I dunno;
'Course that may all be, but you must allow
They ain't any land to discover just now.

ON Monday our copy of the St. Paul Pioneer Press came to hand with an announcement that its subscription prices would be reduced as per advertisement in another column. It is only $5.00 per year for the daily.

TUESDAY brought us the Daily Globe with the announcement that its subscription price for the future would be $3.00 per year, 10cts. per month. This places the news within the reach of most people in the vicinity of post offices where they can receive mail daily.

ONE peculiar and pleasing feature of the late G. N. strike was the gentlemanly politeness and respect for each other shown by the two great leaders Pres. J. J. Hill of the G. N. and Pres. E. V. Debbs, of the A.R.U. It is as well to settle disputes in a gentlemanly manner as in a quarrelsome attitude.

WEDNESDAY morning's dailies contained an account of the shooting, probably fatally of ex-Congressman J. N Castles only daughter aged 19 in the Postal Cafe near the Post Office in Minneapolis, on Tuesday evening about six o'clock where she had gone to wait during a shower of rain. The shooting is said to have been by the jealous wife of the colored proprietor of the Cafe, named Blake. Miss Castle was taken to Hotel Beaufort and medical assistance procured. Her father and mother were summoned from Stillwater, to her bedside. Miss Vivian had been visiting friends in Minneapolis for a week past, and was down town alone on the occasion of the shooting.

"I. D" SHAKES the dust of St. Paul off his feet and takes his flight to Minneapolis where he hopes to flourish better. The Representative is one year old, and its former editor A. L. Stoughton announces that his term of service has expired. It remains to be seen whether the paper can keep up the style it starts in with in its new home in the Boston Block; and whether or not its "I. D's" will be brightened by living in such grand style; so much finer than its readers are supposed to indulge in. The Sage says the people living at the Capital didn't "appreciate" him; and his wonderful efforts; so now he has taken new quarters, where he claims to have been insured success for one year.

Hill and the Bull.

A good story on Pres. J. J. Hill of the Great Northern is told by a former employe. One day as he was visiting his farm, a man he had engaged to take care of an unusually vicious but fine bull, took the animal out for exercise, and on his beginning to show his unruly disposition his keeper gave him a severe flogging with a blacksnake, kept for the purpose. This quieted the bull but enraged his owner, who told his employe to go to the office at once and "get his time." Used to obedience the man quietly tied the bull to a post in the yard and started for the office; on reaching the other end of the barn he was much surprised to meet Mr. Hill who evidently had taken in the situation, and saw no better way out, and repenting his hasty action said "go back and go to work."

G. N. Strike Over.

On Wednesday morning the news was joyfully received here, by a telegram from Debbs and Howard that the representatives of the railroad employes had come to a satisfactory agreement with J. J. Hill and other officials of the road, and the strike, one of the greatest, and best managed in the history of the country had terminated satisfactorily to the employes. Presidents Debbs and Hill both expressed themselves as satisfied with the decision of the arbitration committee. The wheels are again moving over one of the greatest railroads in the country. The men have shown themselver to be imbued with a spirit of manliness in not damaging persons or property, that is seldom seen in events of this kind. Everybody along the road is glad to see the settlement satisfactory.

Fraternities in Politics.

Fraternities should be pure; so should politics. Fraternities and brotherhood societies as institutions of social nature, have a place in the world. Organizations for social purposes can be pleasantly carried on so long as nothing mixes up with them, to interfere with the pleasure of all. But when it is time to elect officers if it is found that one political party has gobled them all; or that the members of one church, have elected their man in every instance; or that a particular nationality has filled the official roll from their own ranks; in either case that the representative men of the lodge regardless of consequences have been relegated to the ranks to give place to inferior parties, for other reasons than that they were best fitted, or even fit at all, to fill the positions to which they have been elected, then does the lodge, or society cease to be at its best; does it begin to stand still; to cease to grow. to deteriate; to loose its influence for good; and its members seek other societies where things are more to their liking. So in societies of professional or tradesmen. When conference meets if the Bishop is a Free Mason and pays more attention to distributing his bretheren of that order among the best paying places than he does to finding the best Christian man he can for each congregation then does his work begin to show; social orders are with the aid of Ministers made to appear of more consequence than is the church. Some people seem to think if they go to lodge, it is unnecessary for them to go to church.

When the lawyers, doctors, editors, carpenters, stone masons, bricklayers, millers, or others hold their annual meetings, they desire to be represented in their officers by those best fitted for the respective places. What a sorry figure some prominent Mason, Odd Fellow, K. P. or other society man would cut as President of the Legal Association, the Medical Association, or some other of our State societies if his only recomendation was the fact that he was a prominent society man. It is the same in politics. How many cases do we see where a prominent society man has been hoisted by the vote of his brethren of all political faiths, into a position of honor and trust for which he was unfit; simply because he was a member of this or that lodge, and his opponent, in every way qualified but not having the password, lacked the number of votes the society represented in his party.

Things ought not to be thusly. If people want a minister they want a man. They want a christian gentleman; who will do what he can for the cause of Christ, and by his example as well as teachings learn them how to live for the hereafter. If they need a physician they want the best to be had; They do not care to trust the lives of their families or themselves in the hands of the unskillful simply because they call him brother in some church or lodge. If they want a lawyer they seek out the man who has given attention to legal matters and knows how to advise them. People trade where they can do the best; they will not eat poor bread to accomodate a miller that dont know his business, and it is the same all the way through.

In politics a man has his ideas. He is a democrat or a republican or a member of some other party. His principles are grounded in him, on every question that comes up his principles cause him to take sides in a greater or less degree with his party. He knows what he wants. He knows what party he would favor, and whose principles best suit him, and when he makes nominations to office be prefers to have the best representatives of his party principles if he is to succeed, and not candidates with whom he has no sympathy save that they are brother in some organization. This thing can be carried too far and it is beginning to show in A. P. A. and other societies.

Long's Pension Reduced.

TELL IT TO M'KINLEY.
The Third Ohio District Goes Democratic.

COLUMBUS, May 1.—The Third congressional district has gone democratic by about 1,000, electing Paul J. Sorge, democrat, over E. G. Rathbone, republican, in a special election held today. Sorg's home Middletown—strongly republican—gave him 408 plurality, while Hamilton, ex-Gov. Campbell's home, carried by the republicans at the last municipal election, gave him 1,183 plurality and Dayton, carried by McKinley by 565 votes last fall, went democratic today by 196. The democrats here are jubilant.

WhoShallBeOur Next Senator?

The Age believes the people of Minnesota are sick unto death of U. S. Senators whose title to their seats is like the title to their breeches, by right of purchase. The Age believes that the great majority of the people of this State are convinced that an election in the ordinary way by the legislature, can only give us the same old brand of senator the one to wit, who will pay the higest price for the position. The Age futher believes that if the Democratic party at its next state convention puts in nomination for that high office a pure, able, clean-handed man and makes the fight in every legislative district in the state upon the question of his election to the senate, that it can elect him beyond a doubt. The AGE knows that we have such a man, able enough to rank with any statesman in the land, so thoroughly honest as to be above suspicion, and with such a record made in thirty years of public life that every citizen of Minnesota knows he is such, and that man's name is William Lochren, and the AGE knows more, that Judge Lochren's name will be presented to the convention, and if he is nominated, the AGE beleives that only his death or the day of judgement can prevent his election. —Aitkin Age.

Mixed Up the Two Websters.

During Daniel Webster's visit to England he was taken one day to see Lord Brougham. That eminent jurist, however, received him with such coolness that Mr. Webster was glad to get away, and took his leave at the first opportunity. The friend saw him to his rooms and then returned to Lord Brougham and in some anger said:

"My Lord, how could you behave with such unseemly rudeness and discourtesy to so great a lawyer and statesman? It was insulting to him, and has filled me with mortification."

"Why, what on earth have I done and who have I been rude to?" asked his lordship.

"To Daniel Webester of the Senate of the United States."

"Great Jupitor, what a blunder!" exclaimed Lord Brougham realizing the mistake he had made. "I thought it was that fellow Webester who made a dictionary and nearly ruined the English language."

Then it is said, the great chancellor sought Mr. Webster, explained and excused his conduct, which the latter generously accepted, and, it is added, having other tastes in common besides law and politics, they made a royal night of it. All of which is probably true enough to found a story on.—Boston Post.

William Kennedy.

The Hennepin county democratic convention, it is confidently believed, will black ball at least one county officer out of the party, when it convenes a few weeks hence. The official referred to has shown that he is a democrat "for revenue only." He was a dead weight on his party in two elections, in which, through no merit of his own, he was successful. It is known that he never pretended to be a democrat until he sought a nomination for office by that party. He has never paid his campaign assessment in either of his campaigns, and has never contributed a dollar or tried to further the interests of his party in any way, though he will have drawn from the country, when he goes out of office forever on Jan. 1st., next, no less than $8,000.00 salary. He has, however, continually catered to the republican party, especially the Chowan wing of it. Chowan's nephew (Shaver, a republican) was employed as his assistant during his first term, and Deacon Wilcox (also a republican and supposed A. P. Aist) during his second term. He himself (Lewis) has been physically incapacitated for properly performing the duties of the office most of the time, and, in disregard of the wishes of the general public and the advice of his party, has refused to resign. He has been a detriment and a disgrace to the schools of the county and the deplorable condition of affairs that has existed during his term of office the democratic party will be held responsible for, if they do not repudiate him. There has been a perfect exodus of good teachers from the county. But it is whispered about that Supt. Lewis will just before the convention convenes, publish a card, announcing his change of politics, and go over to the republicans, as he is displeased with the Cleveland administration, and thus escape the humiliation of being blackballed out of the party.

Several chapters in his life's history before he came to Hennepin county have been brought to the notice of his party leaders and his letters and associations since his instalation into office the second time prove conclusively that he is at heart a real enemy of the democratic party and intent on lending influence at his command to those who seek its destruction and ruin. He is "disgusted" with the democratic party. WILLIAM KENNEDY.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, D. C., April 27, 1894.

At last there is harmony among the democratic Senators on the tariff and the party presents a united front to the enemy. Concessions have been made which will not be satisfactory to lots of democrats, but it was only by concessions that harmony could be secured. There is one consolation for the party. The tarlff bill as it will be amended will be a decided improvement upon the McKinley law, and it will receive the vote of every democratic Senator. Having secured harmony the Democratic Senators are now forcing the fighting and will continue to do so until the bill is passed. Everything is to be made to give way to one object—the passing of the bill; and there is every reason to believe that it will be passed in ample time to become a law on the first day of July. If the republicans persist in the fillibustering tactics they have this week adopted, the democrats propose to resort to heroic remedies to stop it, regardless of rules and precedents.

The great speech made by Senator Mills, of Texas, (many think the greatest of his life,) in closing the general debate on the tariff bill, will probably be the last long tariff speech made on the democratic side of the Senate. The present programme is to compel longer daily sittings of the Senate and to let the republicans do the most of the talking until they have been allowed a reasonable time to debate the bill by items. Then there may be a continuous day and night session lasting until the final vote is reached, unless the republicans will agree upon an early date for taking a vote, and at present there is no indication of their doing that. There are at least four republican Senators who will not fillibuster to prevent a vote.

Mr. John Wedderburn, manager of the "Examiner Bureau of Claims," and the "Press Claims Co.," the last named concern being well known to newspaper publishers by reason of its sending out circulars asking big advertising in exchange for its stock, which was to have "millions in it," sometime in the future, has had some ugly charges made against him by Mr. William R. Hearst, publisher of the San Francisco Examiner, in a bill filed in court asking that a receiver be appointed and that Wedderburn be restrained intermeddling with its affairs. Mr. Hearst says that he was a partner with Wedderburn in the Examiner Bureau, and makes the following specific charges against him: That he established the "Press Claim Co." without Hearst's consent; that he maintained it with money claims, including some for subscribers of the Omaha Bee and the St. Paul Pioneer Prees and has refused to refund money which the contracts with those papers called for; that he has created a large indebtedness, including a note for $8,000 given to Mr. Hearst's mother and signed without authority with the firms name; that he has improperly used money for his personal expenses, and that he has injured the reputation of the San Francisco Examiner by his mismanagement of cases and by sending out a circular offering prizes for inventions, charging competitors an initial fee of five dollars.

The local authorities have made all of their arrangements to receive Coxey's so-called army, which will arrive in Washington early next week. No trouble is anticipated, but if any comes they are fully prepared for it. If the men who come here with Coxey behave themselves and violate no law they will be allowed to remain as long as they please, or rather as long as they can get enough to eat, and you may be sure that will not be long. If they violate the law they will be treated just as other criminals are.

By the way, the populists in Congress are, as the saying is "between the devil and the deep sea" as to Coxey's army. When the "army" first started they to a man denounced the movemeut. Afterwards some of them tried to hedge, Senators Peffer and Allen introducing resolutions in the Senate, and Representatives Davis and Boen bills in the House, in the interest of the "army." This week they held a caucus on the subject. It isn't the "army" they are worrying about, but the votes of their constituents who sympathize with the absurd idea that brings the "army" here. It isn't likely to be much of an "army," after all, as from the best information at present obtainable, even if all of the various bodies of men now headed towards Washinton should get here, which is not probable, there would only be 6,500 of them.

The House is steadily pushing its programme of rapidly disposing of the regular appropriation bills.

CORRESPONENCE

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

The continued rains have kept the roads in bad condition and some places they are almost impassable.

Farmers are mostly through seeding.

A Welker, Town of Franklin, Wright county, joined the G. A. R. Post at Maple Plain last Saturday.

Your correspondent attended the assessor's meeting at Minneapolis, last Saturday. There was 15 or 20 assessors present at the meeting. It was voted that the assessors of Hennepin county reduce assessment of 1894, abont 20per cent on real estate and personal property from what it was the previous four years.

There seems to be a goodly number of Republican politicians up for office in Hennepin county for the coming campaign.

The G. A. R. Post at Maple Plain will observe Decoration Day, 30th of May, in the usual way.

Another bridge will be built across Pioneer creek at Armstrong this week; it will be a pile bridge.

Armstrong school will close in two more weeks.

James Personett took in the Teachers association at Minneapolis last Saturday and returned by the Soo road.

Some of our towns people have got the fever to go west.

It seems that Maple Plain is one man short, at least he has not reported for two weeks.

I have been informed by one of my neighbors who has been consulting with the correspondent to the Annandale Post, from this town, that he says that my first piece to the GAZETTE was too silly to read, especially in referring to him. No doubt it was. How could it be helped when he never did anything but a silly trick? There is one thing that he ought to know, if he don't now; he ought to wait till he could talk English plain himself, before he would try to imitate some one else that can't, like he did Mr. Helstrom. If he would keep out of other people's affairs and mind his business it would be a good deal more honor for himself, than to scandal people in that way that pass though our town.

Those parties that bought cows and had them delivered at Cokato, for shipment to Michigan, were seen Tuesday, going through our town, on their way to Annandale.

There will be more corn and potatoes planted this summer in our vicinity than in any previous year.

STRIKE DECLARED OFF.

The Great Northern Tie-up is a Thing of the Past.

Efforts of Twin City Business Men to Bring About a Settlement are Crowned with Success and Traffic Will Be Resumed at Once.

MINNEAPOLIS, May 2.—The Great Northern strike is over.

The board of arbitration appointed by the commercial bodies of the Twin Cities gave rulings in favor of the men in most cases, and its decision is final.

Everyone is satisfied, the strikers in particular, as the arbitration committee gave them almost everything that they asked for.

About 10 o'clock last night there were some remarkable proceedings going on in the offices of the president of the Great Northern railroad, James J. Hill; proceedings which affected the commercial interests of the entire northwest as well as the happiness of thousands of employes all along the Great Northern road. They were proceedings which terminated one of the most remarkable railroad strikes that the country has ever seen.

This morning the wheels will go round, and as rapidly as possible the traffic of the road will be resumed. The credit for bringing about this happy solution of the difficult matter rests with the business men of the Twin Cities, and but for their untiring efforts in behalf of arbitration the strike would still be on, and possibly other lines would be affected. All day yesterday the business men's committee was in session, and, at the hour stated above, they, as arbitrators, brought in a report settling the entire matter.

Previously they had been in conference with both sides in the controversy and had heard arguments pro and con. The conference was a large one, those present being the strikers' committee, the business men's committee, President Debs and Vice President Howard, President Hill and other officials of the Great Northern road. When the parties really got together there seemed to be very little difference between the two opposing factions. President Hill conceded without argument nineteen-twentieths of the demands of the men, and all that the arbitration committee had to do was to decide the strikers' demands in the cases forming but one-twentieth of the general demand. It took the committee some time to do this, but when it did make its report it was favorable to the men, for the employes of those departments which the committee had under consideration secured a restoration of 75 per cent of the amount their salaries had been reduced.

President Debs accepted the report for the American Railway union; President Hill accepted it for the railway company, and everyone was happy. President Hill was evidently the happiest man in the room, and at times showed that he was deeply affected by the matter, and there were frequent comments on the attachment he seemed to have for his old employes.

There were no trains to go out last night, but traffic was resumed this morning, and last night the strikers' committee sent out telegrams all along the line to the effect that the strike had been declared off, and if President Hill desires, Vice President Howard and L. W. Rogers, editor of the A. R. U. paper, will make a trip over the system notifying the men of the result of the strike.

This settlement brings to an end, as has been said before, a strike that was remarkable for peculiarities. For over two weeks the Great Northern road did not run trains in Montana and the greater part of Dakota, and very few anywhere on the system for that matter. It was the first strike on record where an early start was not made at putting new men at work, and considering the amount and character of the territory involved in the strike, there was remarkably little violence. The damage to property is slight, and one of the best features of all is that there are no bitter feelings left in the trail of the strike. Both sides seem satisfied and there will undoubtedly be the best of feeling between employer and employe in the future.

There is general congratulation over the result, as the business men of the northwest knew of the disastrous effects of such a strike, but few of them realize what a volcano they were really standing on. There is no question but what if the strike had not been settled through the efforts of the arbitration committee there would have been the worst kind of a conflict from this time on, and not only the Great Northern but many other roads would have been involved.

As it was the employes on the other lines were ready to strike when the order should come, and in fact many of them were anxious to receive the strike order. There is not the slightest doubt that had the efforts of the arbitration committee been futile, the strike would have grown much more serious to-day, as the men were at the point where they could be held in no longer. They have been orderly all through the long conflict, and the business interests of the nortwest are fortunate in having escaped as lightly as they did, even though they have suffered beyond estimate.

Violent Death.

Patrick Ryan was almost instantly killed while attempting to stop a runaway team at the corner of Washington avenue north and Sixteenth street, Minneapolis. The team, hitched to a dray, was seen coming down the avenue at a tremendous rate of speed, and Ryan, who was standing at the corner, made a jump for the bridle of the horse nearest him as they dashed by. He succeeded in retaining his hold, and the horses slackened their speed, when he became tangled up in the lines as he was trying to gather them in his hand. He stumbled, and the wheel struck his head, knocking him violently to the ground. Bystanders who had witnessed the accident came to his aid immediately, but his skull was crushed and he was unconscious and soon died. The team was stopped farther up the street.

IDYL OF A SPRING HAT.

The Smart Young Man and the Clever Milliner.

He was very smart young man and much in love with a pretty girl, whose disposition he wanted to find out before committing himself to the momentous question.

So, being a very sharp young man, he formulated a plan of action, on the ground that all is fair in love and war. He was not certain yet which it was to be.

His opportunity came in this way: He heard the young lady say that she intended to return her spring hat to the milliner, as it was not what she wanted at all.

Now the very sharp young man thought if he could overhear what she said when she returned the hat, he would get a fair idea of her temper, and he laid his plans accordingly.

A word to the wise is sufficient. The little French milliner stood him up in a niche, and when the young lady alighted from her carriage, sent out an attendant to take the offending bonnet, and whisper a word in the customer's ear.

The sharp young man was nearly smothered, but he retained his sense of hearing, and this is what he heard:

"So sorry, madam, but this sweet duck of a hat does not quite become me, and will you be so good and kind as to exchange it? Of course I will pay you for your time and trouble, and you will please make me another—something light, and with flowers instead of wings. Oh, certainly, take your own time—and be sure you send the bill with it and don't stint on materials. You are always too reasonable you know, dear, and so very kind."

Then she swept graciously out of the store and drove away.

The young man came out from his hiding place, sneezed, smiled on madame, the milliner, and promised never to forget her.

That night he proposed and was accepted.

When madame heard of it she said:

"It is very good. He so smart he get a wife to match him now. If he not here she call me 'cat!' 'pig!'—now she call him dose pet names. Very good."

WANTS TO BUT DURST NOT.

I never have to bother about what children need,
I'm not obliged to furnish bread and other things to feed;
I never have to keep my eyes upon the small boy's shoes,
I never have to smile, say "yes," or gloomily refuse.

I never have to foot the bill for little baby's milk,
And no one sends an itemized account of daughter's silk;
I'm never told to call upon the corner druggist's store,
And order sent some soothing sirup, a dozen so or more.

I never have to give my cash to buy the children books,
And no one yet has dared to say: "He has his father's looks"
No creature saw me push a gig with baby in the park—
Although I watch the tots that trot between the light and dark.

I never have to do these things that men detest and dread,
At least, so married men tell me—I am alone instead:
And so alone, I'd like to try and start my life anew
And practice things I've mentioned here—but now don't have to do.

THE SAVING OF COOTS.

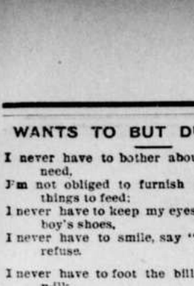
BY GILBERT PATTEN.

[Copyright, 1894, by the Author.]



E THOUGHT her divine; but he was only a curly-headed boy, not more than twenty, and sentimental at that. He had the head of a Greek god and the figure of Apollo, yet he was simply one of the army of supers who came out in tinsel and tin armor to march and pose and form an effective background for the principals who won the applause of the audience night after night. Still he knew he could act. He felt it in his soul, and he would prove it to the whole world some day. He was born with a silver spoon in his mouth, and it made little difference if the governor had cast him off when he left college to go on the stage, for he knew his luck would come back to him in time.

He was always thinking of her. He saw her fresh oval face in the blue-gray rings of his cigarette smoke; the smell of roses was like the perfume of her breath; her eyes looked at him from the pansies on every corner flower-stand. Perhaps this was because she was one of the band of wood nymphs who came out in pink and white to strew flowers for the feet of the prima donna to crush. She should have been a prima donna herself; he had heard her sing, and he knew. Wait till his fortune came back to him.

They were both stopping at the same wretched actors' boarding-house, on a side street that ran from Broadway to the Bowery, and at dinner she sat opposite him at the long table around which gathered nightly a rare collection of chorus girls, ballet dancers, song and dance artists, variety performers, and broken-down and hard-up people of the "legit." He knew that curly shock of yellow hair was not its natural color, and her eyelids were penciled, but she had teeth like ivory and her laugh thrilled him away down into his shoes. It was only when the professional ventriloquist, desiring the butter, made the chandelier squeak, "Shove the grease, Coots," that he became aware he was staring at her and not eating a mouthful. He hated the ventriloquist; for that manipulator of vocalization was the one who had given him the nickname of "Coots," and now everybody in the house called him that—even she called him that.

But she was divine!

The "Johnnies" gathered thickly about the stage door every night to see the chorus girls come out; but he knew she hated the insipid fops, for he had heard her say so, and she never paid any attention to them. She usually got off first, and left the theater as soon as possible, and he had not yet commanded sufficient courage to tell her he would take her safely to the boarding house if she would wait. But one night she was delayed, and he was close behind her when she left the theater.

There was the usual throng outside the stage door, and one of them spoke to her. He had been drinking, and he placed himself in her path, offering his arm and proposing to call a cab. She tried to pass him, but he caught at her arm. The next instant he lay flat on his back, and Coots was walking away with her.

"Oh, I thank you, Coots!" she said, with a catchy little laugh that was like the gurgle of a brook to him. "That cad has bothered me for a week. Perhaps he'll keep away now he has got swiped."

He did not mind the slang; he expected it. He had found everybody talked slang at the boarding house, and it sounded rather sweet and "chic" from her lips, when he would have thought it coarse from some other woman.

"I'm almost ashamed to think I struck him so hard," he said; "but my blood boiled when I saw him put his hand on your arm, Miss Thorne."

"Oh! call me Daisy, Coots; that's good enough for my style."

"Your style! You're too modest. You are fit to star. You will some day, too."

"Well, I hope you're right. All I want is to get hold of an angel. I'll work the duck for all he is worth! Twelve dollars a week is rocky, but I have to do it or get off the earth."

"Wait till my luck comes back to me!" cried Coots. "I'll back you then. I'll have a piece written for you."

"You dear boy!" she laughed.

They did not take a car. She said she had as lief walk, as it would save the fare; and Coots was sure he had much rather walk as long as she was at his side.

"Tell me, Coots—how did you ever happen to get down to this?" she asked.

Then he told her all about it, and she called him a foolish fellow, but he did not agree with her.

"Mother sends me money every now and then, without the governor knowing it," he said. "I'll get along all right until I find an opening and do something to give me a foothold."

Coots never forgot that walk down Broadway and the warm pressure given his fingers by her plump little hand when they reached the boarding-house. That night she was in all his dreams.

Sidney Temple belonged to the "legit," but he was in hard luck; the "Bowery Flower" company, in which he had played the heavy villain, having stranded in Oshkosh, where they were deserted by their manager and left to get back to New York as best they could. Temple had come in on his uppers, and he was staying at the second-rate actors' boarding house until he struck another engagement. How he obtained money to pay his board was something of a mystery, but it was noticed that he had become very friendly with Coots, the two being together a great deal. Daisy was the first to suspect the truth, and, one day, she accused Temple.

"You are playing Coots for a sucker, Temple!" she declared, her brown eyes flashing. "I know he has money from his mother, and you are beating him out of it at cards! You are encouraging him to drink, too."

Temple laughed. "Well, what of it, Little Spitfire? He'll blow himself some way and I've got to live till I get on the road again."

"It's a shame!" cried Daisy, warmly. "You are a scoundrel and he is nothing but a boy!"

"It seems to me you take a remarkable interest in the kid. I believe you're stuck on his bang."

"I don't care what you believe. I'm not going to see him beaten out of his money."

"How will you help it?"

"I know a way. There's a man on Twenty-third street who would give something to know where to find you, and he says he is willing to pay your board at Ludlow street jail for awhile. If you don't let up on Coots, that man is pretty sure to find you."

"YOU ARE PLAYING COOTS FOR A SUCKER, TEMPLE."

"I pass!" said Temple, ruefully. "You hold high cards and the pot is yours."

One day Coots came to Daisy with a strange look of mingled grief and joy on his face.

"It's awful!" he said, chokingly. "Father's dead. Terribly sudden—Heart failure."

He saw the sympathy in her eyes, and he went on, before she could speak:

"He was rich, you know, and his will leaves one-half of everything to me, providing I give up the idea of going on the stage."

"Of course you will do that," she said. "You'd be crazy if you didn't!"

"Yes, I shall give it up. I don't know as I was cut out for an actor, after all. I told you my luck would come back to me, and I would not forget you then. There is nothing in the will to prevent me from marrying an actress and backing her, if I want to do it. If you'll marry me, Daisy, I'll put you out in a new piece and at the head of a first-class company."

"You dear, good boy!" she cried, with a laugh that was half a sob. "I signed contracts for next season yesterday, and I am to marry Sidney Temple next Saturday! We are going out together in the same company."

Coots' luck had truly come back to him!

Energy and mirth are contagious.

A drunkard is a beast minus the instinct.

Deceit is a cockatrice and its eggs are suspicion.

Healthful amusement is the oxygen of the soul.

The more stupid a person the better satisfied is he with himself.

We generally hate a man who hits a target that we have just missed.

It is not unpleasant to hear tales against those whom we have wronged.

Trepidation.

There was about her a poise that comes only from litigation. She was not born yesterday, obviously. "George," she faltered, and her rich, mellow voice awakened a responsive thrill in the heart which was pumping blood in the arm about her waist, "I'm afraid to marry you." He was only human. "Why, my darling?" he demanded, insistently. She shaded her magnificent eyes with her curved lashes as she had been taught to do years previous at the boarding school. "Because, George," she murmured, "you are the thirteenth, and I am superstitious." But in time he convinced her there was really nothing to fear.—Detroit Tribune.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Republican Exuberance Over the Rhode Island Election.

One of the encouraging signs for democracy is the eagerness with which the opposition seizes upon the slightest political event that can be tortured into evidence of popularity regained with the people. The republican organs of high and low degree are especially jubilant over the news from Rhode Island. A clear view of the situation fails to justify their exuberance. The republicans were in a minority at the previous state election in Rhode Island, but they were in power and simply asserted the right of possession, despite the fact that they were outvoted by the democracy. The democrats of that state polled about the same vote that they did a year ago, but six thousand new republicans put in an appearance from some unexplained quarter and scored a victory.

If it could only be assured that this new vote was brought out by patriotism and not by cash the outlook for the republicans in Rhode Island would be more encouraging. They held the government as against a superior number of democrats, and it is better for the reputation of the state that they have a title which they can defend upon moral as well as legal grounds. But experience enables every reading man to understand the political reactions and to realize that they go to the feelings rather than the convictions of the people. Time and again the voice of the electorate has made itself heard with results such as those recorded in the recent elections. There is little in the election of a constable, an assessor or even a mayor to indicate a change of belief as to the merits of the tariff question or a sound financial system.

It would be idle to say that there is not unrest and disssatisfaction resulting from causes which voters are not analyzing with the same care which they will exercise when their votes upon the national issues are to be cast. By many the ills that ist are hastily charged to the administration, though they had their origin in a system which

A BREEDER OF RIOTS.

American Laborers Damaged by the Protection Policy.

Perhaps there is no more serious menace to American institutions than is to be found in the conditions prevailing in the mining district of Pennsylvania, where the late riots have thrown an extensive community into a state of terror and almost of anarchy. The latest phase of the strike is that the Huns and Slavs accuse the Irish and Germans of having worked up the riots in order to create prejudice against the former, and thus secure their expulsion from the region. Thus the conflict is seen to be one in which foreign populations fight out their national differences.

Under our high protective system we have carefully excluded the product of the "pauper" labor of Europe, but we have thrown wide our gates to the paupers themselves, and the American laborer has no protection against the competition of a class of men whose antecedents and native surroundings render them dangerous to free institutions, as well as incapable of properly assuming the responsibilities of American citizenship. The Poles, the Huns, the Italians, the Russian Jews come among us and establish their own communities. They drive out the American laborer, because they are accustomed to live more meanly than he, and will work for less wages than he. The protectionists who hire them pretend that their object in asking protection is chiefly to make wages higher, and Tom Reed, of Maine, who is the spokesman of this party, announces a new school of political economy which makes wages the measure of a country's prosperity; because, he says, unless wages are high, wage-earners will not spend much money. That is the whole argument offered by him. Yet in the most highly protected region of the United States labor riots are of more frequent occurrence than anywhere else in the land, and these riots are invariably the work of pauper Europeans, who have come here to be employed by the men whose solicitude for the wages of labor does not prevent

SOWING THE SEED.

THE HARVEST.—Chicago Herald.

at the last national election the people of the country denounced with a nearer approach to unanimity than any party has attained in years. There is dissatisfaction because some of the servants of the people at Washington are not complying with the orders they have received from those who are the real rulers of the country, and there has been an expression of resentment.

But all this does not go to the root of the matter. Men do not abandon a creed because some of those professing it prove unworthy, nor do they surrender political convictions because some of those whom they have trusted prove recreant. The evils of a protective tariff are as great as they ever were, and at no previous time have their disastrous effects been so apparent. The menace to a sound and honest financial system was never more aggressive than it now is. The wrath of the people will be visited upon those who have betrayed them, not upon the principles which they indorse or the party which is committed to the support of such principles. Republicans are united by the cohesive power of plunder and have no higher purpose than to be in power. Democracy is the party of independent thought, and when it expresses indignation at men or methods it has no thought of abandoning the great work of reform on which the safety of the government depends.—Detroit Free Press.

Republican Lies.

Every intelligent person knows that for the past two years the republican newspapers of the country, almost without exception, have been asserting that the public debt was decreased under Harrison by a much larger amount than under Cleveland. The amount usually given is $75,000,000. If any correspondent questions and asks for the figures he is given those of a bonded debt, the republican editor paying no attention to the increase in the unbonded debt. This erroneous statement has been reiterated so often that there is no republican, and hardly a democrat, who has not accepted it as true. It is useless to show a republican that he has been lied to. Lies are his daily food. But there is no reason at the present time, when he is not excited over political matters, why he should not have a little truth thrown at him, and the proof that the public debt was decreased under Cleveland $62,000,000 more than under Harrison made so plain that the next time he asserts the contrary it will give him a pain in the neck.—N. Y. World.

their employing this troublesome and irresponsible class, because this class works for less wages than our own people will work for.

It is a serious question—this grafting onto the Anglo-Saxon stock of the inferior and deteriorated races of Europe. The men and women who made America great were not bred from that class of Europeans who supply the rioters and the anarchists of the world. The infusion of such blood can only do harm, as harm it has already done. This country welcomes honest men, men capable of comprehending what it means to be a member of a commonwealth that guarantees individual liberty to every member; but it has no place for the ignorant hordes whose instincts rise little higher than those of hungry wolves.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

—"If the reward of labor had ever been increased as an incident or consequence of increased tariff duties on foreign imports, nothing would be easier or more gracious to the advocates and beneficiaries of protection than to show that fact. The very reverse, however, is true. It can never be forgotten that the enactment of the McKinley law in October, 1890, was followed almost immediately by a reduction of the wages of all workers in iron and steel, beginning at Homestead, in Pennsylvania, under Carnegie, resulting in bloodshed and wholesale murder, and extending to all parts of the country and to almost every branch of manufacturing industry."—Voorhees' Speech.

—Gov. McKinley is not campaigning. Most certainly not. He has a contract to carry out with the state of Ohio before he can give his time and attention to meeting a call of the dear people which he has so distinctly heard. It is out of pure goodness of heart that he appears at all the big republican rallies, puts up at the best hotels and condescends to talk with all the newspaper men who call. Yet the major is not campaigning. He is performing the onerous duties incident to his high position of trust.—Detroit Free Press.

—As the date of the Pennsylvania republican state convention approaches, the indications that Senator Quay is going to make another effort to "own a governor" multiply. The senator probably thinks that he will have better luck with his enterprise this year than he had when Delemater was his candidate.—Kansas City Times.

Railway Conundrums.

Lord Bacon wrote: "There be three things which make a nation great and prosperous—a fertile soil, busy workshops and easy conveyance for men and goods from place to place."

The physical welfare of every human being depends, to a more or less extent, upon the development of transportation.

The transportation of freight and passengers all over the world today is done chiefly by railroads.

America owes its greatness, its rapid development and its progress in a very large measure to its railroads.

We are the greatest nation on earth, and we possess the grandest and most perfect system of railways in the world. Few people fully realize the magnitude of our railway interests. Every boy and girl in the land (and grown people, too) should commit to memory the following "railway conundrums:"

How many miles of railway in the world? 370,000 miles.

How much did they cost? Over thirty billion dollars.

Which nation has the greatest railway mileage? The United States—171,563 miles.

What has been the cost? Over ten billion dollars.

How many employes in the service of railways in the United States? 821,415. This means that one person in every 79 in the whole country is employed on a railroad.

What state heads the list in point of railway mileage? Illinois—10,079 miles.

What is the average cost of constructing a mile of railroad? About $30,000.

Who built the first locomotive in the United States? Peter Cooper.

What is the cost of a palace sleeping car? About $15,000, or $17,000, if vestibuled.

How many passengers are carried by the railroads in the United States in one year? 560,958,211 were carried in 1892.

What are the chances of fatal accident in railway travel? Statistics show one killed in every ten million.

What city is the greatest railway center in the world? Chicago.

Which are the largest railway centers in the Northwest? Milwaukee, St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Which was the first railroad built from Chicago northwest to St. Paul and Minneapolis? The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway.

What road carries the largest number of people between the above cities? The Chicago Milwaukee & St. Paul.

In what respects is the C., M. & St. P. R'y celebrated among the railroads of the United States? It is the only road running electric lighted, steam heated, solid vestibuled trains between St. Paul, Minneapolis and Chicago, and between Chicago and Omaha and Council Bluffs. Library buffet smoking cars, private compartment cars and free reclining chair cars.

What road runs the United States government fast mail trains between St. Paul, Minneapolis and Chicago? The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul.

Does any other road furnish the celebrated electric berth lamp to read by? No.

In what country are the railroad rates lowest, the accommodations for travel best, and the traffic advantages enjoyed by the people the most superior? In the United States of America.

Note—Five handsome trains each day from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Milwaukee and Chicago; one to Kansas City and one to St. Louis, via the C., M. & St. P. R'y. Best and most frequent train service between the Twin Cities and the East and South.

From away up in British North America comes the following greeting to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Chief Consulting Physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y. Mrs. Allen Sharrard, of Hartney, Selkirk Co., Manitoba, whose portrait, with that of her little boy, heads this article, writes as follows: "I take great pleasure in recommending Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for 'falling of the womb.' I was troubled with bearing down pains and pains in my back whenever I would be on my feet any length of time. I was recommended to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which I did with happy results. I feel like a new person after taking three bottles of it."

As we have just heard from the frigid North, we will now introduce a letter received from the Sunny South. The following is from Mrs. J. T. Smith, of Oakfuskee, Cleburne Co., Ala. She writes: "I was afflicted and suffered untold pains and misery, such as no pen can describe, for six years. I was confined to bed most of the time. I expected the cold hand of death every day. I was afflicted with leucorrhea—with excessive flowing—falling of the womb—bearing down sensation—pain in the small of my back—my bowels costive—smarting, itching and burning in the vagina, also palpitation of the heart. When I began taking your medicine I could not sit up, only a few minutes at a time, I was so weak. I took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription three times per day, I also took his 'Golden Medical Discovery' three times per day and one of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets every night. I have taken seven bottles of the 'Discovery,' seven bottles of the 'Prescription' and five bottles of the 'Pellets.' I took these medicines seven months, regularly, never missed a day. These medicines cured me. I feel as well as I ever did in my life. Four of the best doctors in the land treated my case four years. They all gave me up as hopeless—they said I could not be cured, and could not live. Through the will of God, and your medicines, I have been restored to the best of health." Yours truly,

Mrs J. T. Smith

Mrs. W. O. Gunekel, of No. 1461 South Seventh Street, Terre Haute, Indiana, writes: "I had been suffering from womb trouble for eight years having doctored with the most skillful physicians, but finding only temporary relief from medicines prescribed by them. I was advised by a friend to take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which I did, and found, in taking six bottles of the 'Prescription' and two of the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' that it has effected a positive cure, for which words cannot express my gratitude for the relief from the great suffering that I so long endured." Yours truly,

W. O. Gunekel

As a powerful, invigorating, restorative tonic "Favorite Prescription" improves digestion and nutrition thereby building up solid, wholesome flesh, and increasing the strength of the whole system. As a soothing and strengthening nervine "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, nervous exhaustion, nervous prostration, neuralgia, hysteria, spasms, Chorea, or St. Vitus's Dance, and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency. Even insanity, when dependent upon womb disease, is cured by it.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a scientific medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. ## DELANO DIARY

BUFFALO GAZETTE $1.00 per year.

—On Wednesday morning Joe Masanz was in town for a coffin for another of his children who had just died, as he stated, from blood poisoning.

—Chas. Brunkow was seen in the county afoot, hunting calves, on Wednesday. He informed us that he had found three nice ones and had a team near, to carry them to town. Roads are awful.

—The Great Northern trains began to run on Wednesday morning after the old fashion, and our local railroad men who have been wearing long faces for about two weeks can once more crack a smile.

—There will be regular service in the M. E. Church Sunday morning. Sunday School at 12 m., Epworth League at 6:45 P. M., but no service at night. All are invited to attend the revival meeting at the Presbyterian Church.

—A quartette of Delano dudes who visited the entertaitment at Buffalo on Friday evening and were coming home later, met with quite an accident on the road. The king bolt of the vehicle is said to have come out and spilt them. Bruised shins are complained of.

—Several of the G. N. trains passing here have been gaily decorated with U. S. flag; so much so that some suggested Coxey's Army, or thought of 4th of July; but as near as can be learned it is the railroad men reqoicing over the outcome of their recent unpleasantness.

—Wm. Hawker drove to Rockford Station a few nights ago in hopes to meet his son from Hamline. Charles did not come, so he started to turn around and come home; in the darkness he drove into a hole and fell onto the wheel going around under it, bruising his face some but not receiving serious injuries.

—The School entertainment, of Delano, which visited Buffalo on Friday and Monticello on Saturday nights, returned home on Sunday, considerably fagged out. As a financial enterprise the trip was a failure. It will take most of the funds on hand, made here at home, to liquidate the expenses of "the Moscow trip." A Noodle says he footed it home.

—A collision on the railroad is reported. Near here on Saturday evening as a couple of trains were running in opposite directions without headlights, they suddenly came together and the passengers were promiscusously mixed up. Several have been confined to their rooms since. It was a handcar collision. A dance in the neighborhood was the cause of the catastrophe.

—On Wednesday a Delano doctor was called by the board of Supervisors of Independence to diagnose a case in a family living near the county line. A girl of 12 years was found with a sore throat but who had been given linement until it was not easy to pronounce as to whether it was diphtheria, or a case of strong liniment. The Supervisors quarantined for further developments.

—The series of meetings conducted by Rev. A. W. Wright, in the Presbyterian Church, have been continued this week and will close next Sabbath night. Mr. Wright appreciates the assistance rendered in the meetings by Rev. J. W. Powell, Pastor of the M. E. Church in this city, who adjourned his services and occupied the pulpit in the Presbyterian church both morning and evening last Sabbath, while Mr. W. was in Minneapolis dedicating a church building. This week Mr. Wright is assisted by his wife, who is a good speaker and an experienced christian worker. She will remain with him until the close of the meeting. The public are cordially invited to attend the closing services Sabbath morning and evening.

—John Brasie moved with his family to Monticello this week. Dr. Shrader will oocupy his residence here.

—Call at Wittman's drug store for tickets to the Catholic School entertainment. Price reserved seats, 35cts.

—Our school is looking forward to their first commencement day, when a class of four bovs expect to become the first graduates of the Delano High School.

—On Wednesday afternoon while leading a horse H. C. Parslow got too near the wrong end of the halter and the horse kicked him in the abdomen, on the sholder, and dislocated his little finger.

—N. K. Coffin and H. Wilder take an early ride several miles into the country every morning. Eb Brandon will have a fine new residence on his farm soon in consequence of their industry and punctuality.

—Where streams are used as the natural outlet for all the filth and drainage in the country and sewerage from towns and cities it is no wonder people die off frequently with Cholera, Yellow fever and other diseases.

—We are in receipt of an announcement of the graduating exercises of the Commercial Deaartment, Gustavus Adolphus College, St. Peter. Our nephew, Henry Elmer Coffin, formerly of the GAZETTE force, appears as class Historian.

—J. S. Cooper has been reaping a harvest while the G. N. was not in active operation by hauling freight from Rockford station. Now that J. J. Hill has resumed the buisness, Mr. C. will have to resume his city trips if he expects to compete in the buisness.

—Read Superintendent Lindsley's notice, in another column, of the Summer School to be held at Buffalo. Every teacher should make it a point to be present and brighten up some studies and add to their store of knowledge to aid them in instucting the coming generation. Much depends on the teacher.

—In another place we give a special to the Minneapolis Journal, from West Union Iowa, which is at the present time of especial interest to our citizens, showing the folly of taking our supply of water fron the river as some advocate.

When a person quenches his thurst from the Delano water works he don't wish to be obliged to think perhaps some of the dead folks, from the cemetery up river are in that water.

—Mr. A. E. Powell has gone into the business of cleaning and repairing organs. If you have an organ that needs cleaning, leave your order at this office and it will be promptly attended to.

Price $1.00.

School Notes.

VERNON WILDER, Editor.
E. CUNNINGHAM, Assis't.

The Senate held no session last week, as the greater part of the members were absent.

It is wonderful how changeable the minds of the High School scholars are. During the first four days of the week they will talk no one side of a question but when the Senate meets on Friday afternoon, they are very eloquent on the opposite side.

We were very much surprised to hear one of the General History class state that Constantius, a Roman Emperor who ruled during the 4th century A. D., died in London. Truly, he must have been quite a long lived Emperor.

The first cane rush of the year, took place Thursday. The Juniors attempted to tie the president of the Senior class around one of the trees but failed to loosen his hold on the cane. One of the Juniors basely deserted and victory perched on the banners of the Seniors. Both classes covered themselves with glory and prespiration.

Professor, to member of Botany class: "What are vertical plants?"

Pupil:—"Those that are inclined."

Some illuminating gas was manufactured in the labratory last Tuesday. It burns with a very hot flame and the class thinks of utilizing it for heating purposes.

The trip to Buffalo and Monticello was a very enjoyable one, though from a financial standpoint it could hardly be called a success.

Several of the High School scholars taught in Miss Cheeley's room during her absence.

While at Monticello some of the members of the company paid a visit to Big Lake. It is a very pleasant drive. On the way the members of the Botany class secured some very good specimens of the wind-flower.

County Cullings.

Maple Lake can undoubtedly knock the socks off Buffalo or Delano in showing pretty girls.—Maple Lake Dept., Annandale Post.

The editor of the aboye department must have a sweetheart at Maple Lake. Delano is willing to test the matter of whose girls are prettiest; not disputing the fact that Maple Lake in the contest would be a "foeman worthy of her steel."

Nothing Democratic seems to suit Editor Tanner, up the line. He tries to make his readers believe that Democrats are about all, but Grover Cleveland, entirely wrong. Don't be discouraged brother; there are a few left; no good comes of brooding over spilt milk. Hoist the banner high and work for purity in the party. Those that keep together win; as witness the late restoration to power, of the party, in the capital of our State.

Some of the timid Democrats of Wright County are, as usual, afraid that the Republicans will elect their men to most all the offices and are casting about for a chance to trade as usual. If the party expects to win voters it must gather itself together, announce its honest Democratic principles "Equal rights to all and special privilages to none" and put on its ticket, for the purpose of making the best possible fight, such men, only, as can be relied on to uphold these principles. "Faint heart never won frir lady," and timid trading democrats are not likely to win any substantial victories.

Senator Eaton, in the Buffalo Journal says 'It tickles the "genial doctor" to have it said that he is the only democrat left in these parts. He is awful easy tickled, so he is.' Don't the learned Senator from Wright read the papers? Hasn't he learned of the early, big convention to be held by the g. o. p. in this state, to be addressed by some eminent down east protectionists? Of the desperate straits into which protection has fallen under the present McKinley tariff law? Of the Herculian efforts of Republican leaders to hold the rank and file of this once safely republican, but now doubtful state in line this fall? Hasn't he heard from St. Paul? And don't the learned Senator begin to think there are more Democrats than one in the country; and that when he speaks of the "genial doctor" in such a fashion that he tickles lots of folks? The G. O. P. is going to sights of trouble to capture one poor lone Democrat; we don't believe the Journal nor the Eagle are telling what they think when they intimate that Republicans will have an easy victory rhis fall, even in Wright county.

Among Our Exchanges.

Mrs. L. H. Rawson has gone to Dassel to operate the hotel which Mrs. Adlerbjelke has been running. Miss Carrie Rawson will have charge of the Howard House for the time being at least. --Litchfield News-Ledger.

Parties planting potatoes here this spring will do well to get their seed outside of town. Parties who have raised potatoes here for several seasons claim that home grown potatoes when re-planted produce a scabby crop. Too much care can not be taken in selecting seed.—The Mille Lacs County Times.

The Cocato Commoner says in its Smith Lake items that Prof. Collins has gone to farming; that J. C. Johnson contemplates setting out 50 acres of tobacco; and Joe Ferrel 25 acres of celery. Why not diversify a little? Mr. Cochran can't raise hogs; people say they won't eat tobacco. Farrel must be going to start a Celery compound factory, while Collins is probably only joining the grangers for political purposes.

Whose Ox is Gored Now?

The republican newspapers raised a great uproar over the Smith & Co. pine land deal, because the state auditor Bierman, was a democrat. We notice they are not saying much about the two new cases where suits have been brought to set aside certain sales of pine-land, made by ex-auditor Braden, because Braden is a republican.

It makes a great difference whose ox is gored. —The Representative.

Teachers' State Summer Training School at Buffalo.

The State Summer Training School for the Teachers of Wright county, Minn., will open at Buffalo on July 16, 1894, under the conductorship of Prof. W. F. Webster, of the East Side High School of Minneapolis, assisted by Prof. Otis C. Gross, of New Ulm and Miss Julia B. Clifford, of Minneapolis. Prof. C. H. Congdon, musical director of the schools of St. Paul, will give special instruction in vocal music during the first week of the school and eighty minutes will be given to his work in the forenoon and sixty minutes in the afternoon, thus providing our teachers with excellent advantages in this line.

Commencing with July 23rd the hour from four to five p. m. will be given to penmanship for ten days under the instruction of an accomplished penman.

A special instructor in physical culture will be provided if a sufficient number desire to take up that branch, and a weekly tuition fee of fifty cents will be charged such teachers to defray the expense of such instruction.

All other departments of the school will be free.

The classes will be arranged in groups and each teacher may select one study in each group but teachers are advised not to take more than four branches; less than four will be apt to result in time idled away.

PROGRAM—OPENING EXERCISES.

Geography, Physiology.

Geometry, U. S. History, Civics.

Reading, Physical Geography.

Recess.

"Arithmetic A," "Arithmetic B," "Algebra A."

Literature.

Grammar, Physics.

Intermission Two Hours.

Recess.

Study One Hour.

During the stay of Prof. Congdon the programme will be modified and sufficient time given to the study of music so that our teachers will have a thorough drill in that branch. Also during the lesson in penmanship the study hour will be devoted to that branch.

Every teacher in Wright county should be present at the opening of the school and be prepared to stay the entire term. Any teacher who comes and remains less than a week will be treated as a visitor and such teacher will not be recognized as a member of the school. However, all who come shall have the full privileges of the school although they remain only a day. Our object in this rule is to discourage those teachers who come to look around for a day or two and then go away "members of the summer school." After the close of the seventh day of the school no new teachers will be enrolled without they render valid excuses why they were not present at the opening of the term.

School boards will be asked not to employ teachers who neglect to attend the summer training school. "Good wages, well trained teachers and faithful work" should be the motto of school board and school teachers. Neglect any of those points and as a rule the people suffer. Teachers should supply themselves with text books; any good text book will answer.

In pedagogy we will use Emerson E. White's School Management and the work with outline costs one dollar.

In Literature we will use as text books Berard's History of England and The School Master in literature. These two books with outlines cost $2.30.

We will use the state reading circle outlines and thus have two objects in view, reading circle work and the study of literature.

All of the above named works can be had of the county superintendent or directly from the publishers. If ordered by mail 15 cents extra per volume must be added to cover postage.

Board can be had at about three dollars per week and teachers who desire assistance in finding a boarding place should apply to the county superintendent, who will be found at the American House.

County Superintendent.

"KEEP HUMPIN."

I remember the time when I wrs a lad;
An' lived on the farm long with ma and dad;
In the long hot days how I'd have to hoe
Out in the cornfield, row after row.
How I'd think of the fishes that lay in the brook.
An' I just a-longin' to take my hook
An' line, an' sprawl by that ole trout stream.
Fer I loved in them days to loaf an' to' dream—
An' watch the fish a-jumpin;
Then I'd groan an' bemoan my unfortunate lot,
I'd go to my father an' say' "It's so hot—
Can't the corn an' pertatoes wait well as not?"
But my father, he'd say—
In a stern sort of way—
"Keep humpin'."

Then I'd work with a will till each sep'rate row,
Stood fourth without airy a weed to show;
An' each little rock I would duly install
In its proper niche in the ole crumblin' wall.
An' I'd say to my father, as proud as could be
"I've finished my work, dad!" an' then in high glee
Off I'd go, skippin' and jumpin';
Then he'd say, "It's well done exceptin' one spot;
Now bring down them cows from the north pasture lot—
There's no time to shrirk—a farmer has got (So my father would say
In a stern sort of way)
"Keep humpin'."

Take this for your maxim, and may it e'er be
Deep-seated and firm as the roots of a tree:
Whatever your work, whether peddling corn
Salve or door-mats, or tsotin' a horn,
Or sellin' of clothes-line or cloth by the yard,
You'll find that your duty'll be much the less hard,
If you put to your labor the heft of your soul;
Half-hearted won't win—you can't fetch the goal
By occasional skippin' an' jumpin';
If you're fully determined, my friend, to "git there"
You mustn't sit down by the wayside and swear;
You can gather more courage from a fervent prayer,
And, as father would say,
In a stern kind of way,
"Keep humpin'."

THE latest additions to our exchange list are the Dassel Anchor and the Duluth News Tribune, both wide awake papers.

THE Duluth News Tribune denies the statements made by some of the Twin City dailies that Duluth has on hand 2,000,000 tons of coal. The N. T. says that 500,000 or 600,000 tons is all that is now in stock. This seems to have been a scare for the coal miners. Nothing more.

THE city press true to their custom are claiming all the honor of settling the Great Northern strike. We in the country, suspect that public opinion, as voiced by the country press along the line of innocuous disuetude, had something to do with the orderly conduct of the strikers as advised by their leaders which was a very great factor in the setting in motion the wheels of J. J. Hill.

THE Duluth Tribune says Hon. O. D. Kinney should be selected as Congressman from this, the Sixth District. It seems two years ago the Republicans thought Judge Searl would run better and he was beaten by M. R. Baldwin who has proven himself a good man in Congress. It may be possible that the present incumbent will be re-elected, as it is customary to endorse good men's actions by giving them second terms.

Cheap Newspapers.

Our newspapers are being sent out broadcast over the land. They are in the reach of all. None who pretend to keep house, so poor as not to be able to have one or more papers every week at least. One cause for their being so cheap is the cheap rate of postage charged for delivering them through the U. S. mails. There is a movement on foot to raise the price of newspaper postage from 1 to 8cts per pound. This it is claimed would be in the interest of having cheaper letter postage. But would not the poor man living in the country and who receives his mail through the post office have to pay most of this. While he writes a few letters he receives many papers for which he would have to pay out more money if the proper rate is raised; while city people whose mail is brought to their door by free carrier, employed at Government expense could send out innumbrable letters through the mails at cheap rates. Is not the cheaper newspaper rates more advantageous to the country people? Besides if the rate on letters is cheapened, also, will they not, like newspapers become more plentiful in the mails and in their increased numbers pay enough more postage to make up for the decrease in rates? Will not country people write two letters where they now write one. When the postage is but half as much? and there is plenty of room in most of the mail bags to carry twice what mail they do in country places, at very little extra cost if any.

McGary on Money.

INDEPENDENCE, May 8.

EDITOR BUFFALO GAZETTE:—Patrick Henry said he had but one lamp by which his feet were guided and that was the lamp of experience. It seems that many people of this country are getting a good deal of experience while a few are getting all the money. The great confusion and contention in Congress over the money and tariff questions is getting rather stale to the lookers on who have had their mouths fixed for sometime for the fruits of Paradise. The question is shall we have a high Protective tariff or a tariff for revenue only? The Constitution of the United States says: A tariff for revenue only. The east and the eastern manufacturer says a high protective tariff; and so say the leaders of the republican party. Why? Because the party favoring high protection and that will pass a tariff bill to that effect will receive the help of the east, and the eastern manufacturers votes; and their money. And it seems that a fellow who has any brains above his shirt collar would not be long getting that through his head. These fellows out west who hallow themselves hoarse over high protection is either paid for doing so; or else they have a missunderstanding of the question at issue. It is something else besides a high protective tariff the north and west want; it is a sound currency and plenty of it in circulation. According to the last census report New York city and her suburbs has more invested in manufacturing establishment than all the south; which, in the aggregate amounts $712,000,000, for New York City and suburbs; and for the whole south, $418,000,000. Add the cities of New England with her manufacturing industry, to New York and we have $604,000,000 more. Pennsylvania, New York and Delaware furnish $657,000,000 more and the army manufacturing employes eqceeds the number of slaves in the country before the war, and is 4,700,000 souls. Now the leading politicians figure largely on all this capital and these employes to help elect men of their party to office. So when you see any political party counting the good graces of the eastern manufacturers you may know what it is for. Stop your cry about a high protective tariff and let the west and the east have an equal chance with each other. The chief politician says a high protective tariff helps the wage earner. Yes; the devil told Adam and Eve if they would only eat the apple they would be as Gods. But they found it lots of sweat, and hard work for a little experience. And some day these high protectionists will realize a like experience.

John Sherman says our silver dollar is only a 50 or 60 cent dollar. Who made it so? Did not Congress do it? Does not the Constitution of the United States say Congress has the right to coin money, and regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin; and fix the standard of weights and measures. Then I say talk like Sherman's is extravigant and sounds like treason. Look at the American silver dollar, on one side is "E Pluribus Unum" which means one composed of many" and is the motto of the United Stats. On the other side is stamped these words, "In God we trust." Now can it be possible that any American citizen, born under the shadow of the American flag, and protected by the statutory laws of this country will deny that the 412½ grains in our silver dollar is a dollar to all Intents and purposes; when it is backed up by the faith of the Nation and the Supreme being? How could it be made any stronger? But, he says silver bullion is worth only about 50 or 60 cents per ounce. But that cuts no figure, so long as it has the stamp of the Government, saying that it is a dollar, 100 cents. Is there any value in a paper dollar only for the stamp of the Government? If there is, it is so small it could hardly be enumerated. A number of years ago silver bullion was worth $1.29 per ounce; then, according to Mr. Sherman,s doctrine we should have had one dollar and twenty-nine cents for only a dollar. Would the Government have tolerated any such tomfoolery as that? Money is only money by the stamp of the Government and the faith of the Nation. But he has come as near doing it as any one man during the last 20 or 25 years. It is now getting time for the people to begin to look into the affairs of this Government and not trust every thing to our leaders; for often they deceive us. When times are hard men are more apt to want to know where their money is going; for they have none to throw away.

Yours, in hope of a better condition of things, morally, religiously and financially.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 4, 1894.

President Cleveland and his Cabinet are pursuing the even tenor of their official duties just as though there were no such thing in existence as Coxey's army. The President has promised to attend the unveiling of the Martha Washington monument at Fredericksburg, Virginia, on the tenth inst., and tomorrow Secretary Herbert will leave for the Pacific coast to inspect the Government Navy Yards in that section.

Coxey's march upon the Capitol was one of the most farcial fizzles of the age. Today he and Carl Brown and Christopher Columbus Jones are being tried in the police court for violating the law in attempting to make speeches from the steps of the Capitol. They are not likely to be severely punished—probably small fines as a warning. If the foolish men now on their way to Washington to join Coxey could get within smelling distance of the pest hole in which the poor Coxeyites are confined—Coxey says encamped—they would turn back at once. Inasmuch as Coxey was told by the Health officer of the danger attendant upon putting those poor devils in a marsh partially filled with dumpings of city filth, with an open sewer on one side and stagnant green scummed cesspools on the other, and the foul atmosphere thoroughly impregnated with malarial germs, it looks as though he would be glad to gain a little additional notoriety by having a lot of them die like dogs. Nearly all of the four hundred men now there are half sick from exposure and lack of proper food and the daily inspections by the Health officials is followed by the ambulance carrying some of them to the hospitals. Coxey, being comfortably quartered at a hotel, says he intends to keep these men here until they are joined by several hundred thousand, but he wont. Those who don't get sick will desert; every day some of them get arrested for begging in the streets and are set down as vagrants.

In addition to recovering $27,513.24 paid out on fraudulent or illegal pensions, the democratic management of the Pension Bureau has sayed the Goverement in the neighborhood of a million dollars during the last twelve months by frauds and the stopping of accrused payments on them. That is just the sort of thing that the people have a right to expect from the democratic management of every branch of the government.

They would doubtless resent being called lobbyists but there can be no doubt that the work upon which the gentlemen who are here representing the various parties interested in Pacific Railroads legislation, now being considered by House and Senate committees are engaged in is lobbying pure and simple. Each and every one of them is after legislation that will protect the interest he represents, regardless of the interests of the government.

The Republicans in Congress are not doing much talking this week about the special election Tuesday in the third Congressional district, at which the democrats elected Paul J. Sorg to Congress by a substantial majority, although a week ago they were boasting that the district would go republican as a protest against traiff reform. It seems that the democrats of that district are like those of all the other districts—they want tariff reform, and the democratic Senators cannot give it to them any too soon.

The Republicans are as quarrelsome and spiteful as a lot of setting hens these days, and all because the democratic Senators do not see fit to take them into their confidence as to the of the proposed amendments to the tariff bill. With the exception of the day that the Senate adjourned immediately after assembling, because of the death of Senator Stockbridge, of Michigan, there has not been a session of the Senate for a week at which the republicans have not attempted to provoke the democrats into a row. To the credit of the democrats be it said they have as a rule kept their tempers, allowing the Republicans to make a lot of ridiculous statements about something that they knew absolutely nothing about the intentions of the democrats The favorite misstatement seems to be that a new tariff bill is being prepared. Although denied when first made, by Senators Voorhees and Harriss, it has since been reiterated by half a dozen republican Senators. The democratic Senators will in due time announce the amendments to the tariff bill which will be supported by the Finance committee and they will pass them, too; also the bill. The object of the republicans is to create dissention among the democrats but it will not succeed. The democrats are today nearer together than they have been during the session, and will remain so.

FROM CALIFORNIA.

Hon. B. F. Christlieb still at Monrovia.

As anticipated the California April is a pleasant month accompanied with moderate variations of temperature and leaving out the matter of frequent rain it is much like a Minneasota June. The trees that have been green all winter have taken on a richer green in the new foilage which, so to speak, has forcibly displaced the old. Amongst the trees growing here naturally one sees but few of the varieties existing in the Mississippi Valley. Some of the varieties noticed by the writer are the monntain or live oak, a tree with irregular Shaped trunk and branches, the latter extending outward with crooks and curves and carrying a heavy coat of foliage, the combination constituting a grand shade tree for lawns and residences, and parks. this species of oak is of a slow and sparse growth existing in its wild state amongst cacti, shrubberry, sage, pepper trees, and other growths of the wild tracts and the pioneer and spectator appreciating beauty of this species of oak are careful to preserve it in its original position which has been a very wise precaution. The pepper tree is not the tree that furnishes the pepper of commerce. It bears peppery red berries which gives it its California name. Its right name is supposed to be Peruvian Mastic. The foliage of the pepper tree and some other varities of trees consist of small leaves projecting from stems much like ferns. The pepper trees, Eucalyptus, palm trees, live oak and other varieties are found along the sides of streets of the towns, roads in the country and in the lawns of the residences of both, accompanied with all kinds of flowers. In the country these beautiful hedges inclose immense orchards of oranges, lemons, peaches, almonds, and many varieties of fruits and nuts which during March and April were laden with the most fragrant blossoms.

In this connection the writer gives the following extract from the Los Angeles express which gives some matter of interest in regard to trees, grass and in matters pertaining to California:

"Thomas H. Wallin, one of the old time merchants of Chicago, who is stopping at the Hotel Lincoln, is making his first visit to the Pacific Coast, and is greatly pleased with Southern California. Mr. Wallin said to an Express reporter: "Southern California is in many respects different to any country which I have ever seen, and particularly so in this: It is at once the home of the blue grass and the palm, and that is a singular and very agreeable combination. In travelling South in the Eastern States the blue grass is general to about the northern line of Georgia and Alabama, and there ceases. The palm is found further south, but even there is not in such strength an variety as here. But here where the palm is at home I have seen as fine blue grass lawns as can be seen in any of the Northern states. One thing, I think is open to criticism. Your entertainers of the public, as a rule, are not sufficiently attentive to keeping their public rooms at a proper temperature. A great many elderly people come out here, and to them the low temperature that often prevails in public rooms of hotels and boardhouses is a source of suffering and drnger. This is not the case in all hotels, but in many of them. A fixed temperature should be maintained as steady as possible, and it aught to be about 70 degrees. Eastern people as a rule, in winter, maintain a higher temperature in their living rooms than prevails here." Mr. Wallin is a brother of C. E. Wallin of Gardena, and of Associate Justice Wallin of South Dakota Supreme Court.

Los Angeles is the metropolis of Southern California although it is situated inland not less than 22miles from the nearest point on the Pacific coast, it would seem that it is not always necessary for a city associated with the commerce of the world to be located where the tide ebbs and flows to command the commercial situation of its part of the world. There are several psints on the ocean opposite Los Angeles in rivalry as to which shall be the landing place or harbor for the ocean traffic to and from that city, namely: San Pedro, Santa Morica and Redonda Beach. Santa Morica is backed by the Southern Pacific R. R. Co. where that company has already erected a pier 4,000 feet in length and an effort was made on the part of the S. P. R. R. Co to have the city of Los Angeles endorse Santa Morica as a suitable place to receive congressional aid. Los Angeles however preferred San Pedro which had already received an appropriation from Congress under recommendation of U. S. Civil Engineer and besides San Pedro is protected by a peninsular which in the opinion of many gives it an advantage over the other points where artificial structures will have to be erected for the protection of shipping while lying in harbor. Redonda has a pier of 400 feet. Seagoing vessels land at the three different places. All thess points are places of resort for tourirts and are provided with first class hotels.

CORRESPONENCE

LAKE SILVIE SAYINGS.

The Minneapolis sports report our fishing poor, as yet.

Numerous boat races have been indulged in lately. A. W. Dorman takes the cake, so far.

One of French Lake's young gents went Sunday to give his best girl a buggy ride and failed; and for a blind called on Chas. Mabus.

A. W. Dorman has given his new barn a fresh coat of paint.

Mr. Rudolph is a regular visitor of Lake Silva sports.

Three of our sports left on Thursday for Minneapolis.

By reading the GAZETTE and the Post one is led to believe the French Lake correspondents are getting hot; but your correspondent is putting it all over the other one; and glory on him.

Sheriff Carpenter was here Friday; on official business.

FRENCH LAKE FACTS.

Farmers, in our yicinity, have been a little late with their spring work; but fields are beginning to look green and beautiful; with good weather there will be fine crops.

A new settler in these parts on his way home from town, one day last week, broke a wheel off of his wagon and ilightly injured himself. Whisky is the cause of a heap of trouble.

James Gorman, of Maple Lake, was attending to some business in our town last Wednesday.

R. W. Rousseau, of Annaudale, visited his annt one day last week.

Miss Emma Johnson is going to work for Mrs. Tracy, of South Side, in a few days.

The Ely Joseph and Emal Sandel fight is not settled yet. The Justice is said to have asked for security for costs, and they have not been furnished.

The French Lake correspondent of the Buffalo Journal sent in an impudent little piece, two weeks ago, in defence of Ely Joseph, and then pulled out like like a cowardly plucked gander. If Ely and his cowardly assistant want to see more they should stop in sight.

Your correspondent and several others from this town tended the fair at Cokato, Saturday. The streets were crowded with people, but not much business was done.

Pete Wanalow is going into the swine and poultry business. That's right.

John Johnson has completed his new barn.

Herman Homer visited the cities a few days last week.

Mr. Dahlgren did business at Kingston, Saturday.

Patrick Sharry arrived in our town Saturday, to visit friends.

Mrs. Lanto and her daughter Tilda are dangerously sick.

John Tracy was in our midst Saturday.

The Catholic people of this place came togather Wednesday last and cleaned and fixed up the grouuds around the church.

Chs. Cofield passed through our burg Saturday; movieg to Annandale.

It is reported that some Minneapolis sports are netting at Lake Silvie. If so, they had better look out for themselves or they may get a free ride back to the cities.

Desire Gurard and C. Mabus visited the sports at Lake Silvie Sunday and report a pleasant time.

A. R. Hathorn was in our town Friday trying to sell imported horses.

Sheriff Carpenter was here Friday summonsing jurymen for the June term of court.

Miss Emma Johenson left here Monday for Minneapolis where she intends spending the summer.

Mr. Rosky's whiskers caught fire one day last week while burning; he shaved the remained.

A large number of young folks gathered at the house of J. C. O'Loughlin, Monday, engaging in a dance and report a splendid time.

A young man living a short distance east of the French Lake store is expected to have his upper lip hang over his chin if he can't keep company with some lady in the near future.

It is reported that one of our old bachelors is going to correspond for the Eagle next week; no doubt he would have better success looking for some old widow.

Miss Ida Lanto died, Saturday morning, at her home. She was 13 years old; and leaves a mother, sister and three brothers to mourn her loss. The funeral took place Sunday morning. The remains were interred in the Finn Luthern cemetery.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas O'Loughlin were surprised by a social gathering of young folks Friday night. They passed the evening in dancing and social plays gleasing to all.

Woman's Column.

EDITED BY MRS. E. A. STACY.

So many of our workers are inquiring the date of the National W. C. T. U. convention that they will be glad to know that a cable-gramm jnst. received from Miss Willare anounces Nov. 16 as the day for the opening of the Convention at Cleveland Ohio.

Instead. therefor, of putting the responsiblity for liquor on God, we advise the clergy to lay toe whole blame for it on men as a dangerous luxury which God compels neither to produce or consume any more than he compels them to do anything else. Moreover it is questionable weather the influence of the clergy in preqenting the abuse of liquor woule not be strengthened greatly if they refrained wholy from its use themselves. Besides, being usually emotional men of sedentary habits, they are better off without such a stimulant. The habit of drinking, dangerous for everybopy, is especially dangerous for them, in their own persons and in the example they set for other people.—New York Sun.

The poor temperance reforms are hounded bu the same cry: "If you destroy the ssloon, what will you put in place of it?" Nothing, gentlemen conservatives—absolutely nothing. If I kill a ratlesnake I am in no fever to make his place good in the general economy of nature. The saloon is just as deadly a foe in the moral world. Believe me my brother temperance reformers, our sole buisness is to kill that snake. This maudlin pler that workingmen must have some refuge from their miserable homes breaks down the women and children in those same miserable homes. If we address ourselves to any phase of this problem, it will not be to furnish places to draw off the men by themselves, but to make the homes places where the entire family can live in normal decency and comfort. The saloon is always and everywhere the deadly foe of the home. It would be poor business for reformers to replace it by some device which perpetuates one of its worst features—the colling away of the men of the family to a life of seperate masculine amusement and indulgence.—J. ### Binding Twine.

Henry Wolfer, warden of the penitentiary, at Stillwater has sent out a lot of samples of the prison made binding twine. The twine is of hemp, grown in Minnesota, Iowa and Kentucky, mostly. Mr. Wolfer says:

"This twine will be sold the present season at a price not to exceed 7 cents per pound, and lower, if necessary, to meet competition of any twine of any length and quality that may be placed on the market, said price to be finally determined by the Board of Managers June 1, 1894. All the purchasers of twine previous to that date will be entitled to the benefit of any reductions below seven cents that may be made by the Board. There need, therefor, be no hesitancy in placing orders now, as the prices will be adjusted as above indicated." Farmers who will need twine this fall, if they like the twine, will do well to place their orders in time. Call and get a sample at the GAZETTE office. We have a full ball for examination. 26tf

Their trust is only in their own superior shrewdness.

WITH the burning of the old St. Charles hotel in New Orleans disappears a historic structure that was known all over the country. It was a part of the political history of the United States and it constituted the rallying point for the social life of the south. It was historic as the real birthplace of the southern confederacy. It was a landmark in the business, the politics and the society annals of the southern states. Probably a new St. Charles will arise upon the ruins. But it will never be what the old house was. The original hotel typified the old order of things now gone forever.

A CORRECT PRINCIPLE.

Patronizing Home Industries Insures Better Business Conditions.

A good many of the readers among the merchants and manufacturers of the Northwest, may recall the interview published early in January with George W. Parker, describing the operation of an association in Nebraska, organized for the purpose of encouraging the consumption of Nebraska made goods and trade with Nebraska dealers, whether handling Nebraska goods or goods manufactured elsewhere, the purpose of this organization being to encourage the patronage of home industries. The territory covered by that association is marked by the state lines of Nebraska.

When that article was printed the attention of a large number of business men was called to it and their opinion asked as to the wisdom of the organization of an association of that kind for the benefit of not simply Minneapolis or Minnesota products, but Northwestern business in general. The idea met with approval very generally. Since that time a number of meetings of business men of Minneapolis and St. Paul have been held for the purpose of inaugurating a movement of this kind. Correspondence has been held with a number of business men throughout the Northwest, who have almost invariably given it their very hearty approval, and a call for a convention on the 23d of May in Minneapolis, has been issued, signed by W. S. Benton and C. D. Hefflefinger, of Minneapolis; J. A. Gregg and Eli Warner, of St. Paul; J. D. Green, South Superior, Wis.; H. M. Kinney, of Winona, Minn.; J. A. Willard, of Mankato, Minn.; Geo. A. Tileston, of St. Cloud, Minn., and H. C. Goddard, of Decorah, Ia.

Mr. Parker, who has been very actively interested in promoting this plan, has had considerable correspondence with members of the Omaha association, and the testimony of the Nebraska business men, after having given the scheme a fair test in that state, is interesting and valuable. A few extracts are here given:

Gedney Pickling Co., Omaha, Neb.—"The work of the Manufacturers and Consumers' association has been very successful, and a great many people have given Nebraska-made goods a trial who never thought anything could be made in our state. The business of this association has kept up through all these dull times. The state board of purchases and supplies, providing for the state institutions, endorse their proposals for bids to the effect that all goods must be of Nebraska manufacture where possible." (This applies to goods consumed by asylums, prisons, hospitals and other state institutions.)

Harpham Bros., Leather, Saddlery, etc., Lincoln, Neb.—"The Association has most emphatically been a great benefit. The work is progressing finely, our association is growing stronger, and we have every reason to believe that through it we are working up a pride in home manufactures that is bound to be more or less permanent. The state board of purchases and supplies for 13 state institutions specify on all application blanks that the goods must be of Nebraska manufacture."

Paxton & Vierling Iron Works, Omaha, Neb.—"There is every reason to believe that the loyalty to home made goods, encouraged by the Manufacturers and Consumers' Association, is building up our city, and the people in general realize the fact that the association has been the helping hand of the state during this spring, as the small manufacturers have made a better showing in the year '93 than years prior to it. We know of a great many instances where the home patronage movement has given us the preference."

Consolidated Coffee Co., Omaha, Neb.—"We are charter members of the Nebraska Manufacturers and Consumers' Association and feel that it has been a great benefit to the manufacturers of the state directly and indirectly. The consumers take kindly to the idea and some of our retailers are quite enthusiastic and none antagonize the movement. The work is still progressing and I am possitive it will be permanent."

Bemis Bag Co., Omaha, Neb.—"The work of our Manufacturers and Consumers' Association has been almost marvelous. We have had the co-operation and aid of most of our people and it is rapidly becoming a settled fact that goods made in the state are given preference over products of other states. There is no question but that a loyalty to goods made in the state has been established, and furthermore, some of our products heretofore almost undeard of have been brought before the people, and on comparison they have been found as good as anything outside and naturally now hold their own against similar goods made outside. We can certainly see that it works directly in our favor in our own business. We have and always will be found supporters and subscribers to the home patronage movement, and believe our Manufacturers an I Consumers' institution to be an excellent example of the republican principle."

A dozen or more other letters might be quoted to the same effect. The universal testimony in Nebraska is that the scheme is an excellent one and that too much cannot be said in its favor. The principle acted upon is sound. Home patronage for home industries insures prosperity. Every consumer who consumes goods made in the Northwest furnishes employment to labor, makes it possible for the employer to pay good wages, and builds up a community and a class of people who are able in turn to patronize him. This principle applies not only between citizens of the same town, but communities of the same general section.

A great deal has been said in Minneapolis and St. Paul about patronizing home industries, meaning the patronage by Minneapolis people of Minneapolis manufacturers and dealers, and by St. Paul people of St. Paul manufacturers and dealers. But very little has been said about extending this principle within a wider range and emphasizing the advantage of securing the patronage of Northwestern industries by Northwestern people in general.

That is what is now proposed. It is proposed that the merchants of the towns and cities of Rice county, Minnesota, for instance, who have butter, eggs, milk and farm general supplies of all kinds to sell to Minneapolis shall, when they have make their sale in Minneapolis, purchase their clothing, boots and shoes, dry goods, groceries, and other articles of merchandise, in provided they can do as well there as in Chicago, and that when they sell in St. Paul they shall do the same thing for St. Paul; when they sell in Duluth or Winona, they shall do the same in those towns. By doing so they make it possible for the manufacturers of Minneapolis or St. Paul, or such other commercial or manufacturing centre, as may be their market, to hire more men and pay more wages to people who will in turn become larger consumers of the milk, butter and eggs, and other produce of such a community as Rice county.

The same thing applies to all sections of the Northwest. North Dakota, for instance, is now seeking to demonstrate that her newly-discovered fuel product, lignite, is adapted to the manufacture of steam, and expects to find a large market for it in Minneapolis and St. Paul, and other Northwestern cities, and in return to spend the money she receives from the purchase of her coal in the same cities that constitute her market for fuel. It is intended that this principle shall apply clear down to the retail dealer, and that it shall mean everywhere that the consumer shall purchase his supplies from the nearest source of supply, and especially in that quarter in which he disposes of his own products.

It is firmly believed that if this practice is put in effect that the millions of dollars that are sent out of this state and out of the Northwest every year for clothing, boots and shoes, hats and caps, and goods of all kinds that are also made in the Northwest, were spent with Northwestern manufacturers and dealers it would result in such a stimulus to business in this section that all classes of industry and trade would be highly prosperous. For example, if the people of Minneapolis would buy their shoes from Minneapolis manufacturers the shoe business of Minneapolis would be many times what it is now in volume. It is the consumer who holds the key to the situation. And yet, no one is a consumer who is not a producer of something and has something to sell. He either has labor to sell, and is interested in the multiplication of opportunities for labor, or he has produce of some character, and is interested in developing as large a market for his product as near at home as it is possible.

It has been objected that this proposition implies unfair discrimination against other sections of the country. Nothing whatever of the kind is intended. It is simply proposed that prices and quality being equal, the home manufacturer or dealer shall be patronized rather than the manufacturer or dealer who may be a thousand miles away, and from whom no return of business can be expected. It is a straight business proposition, based upon strictly correct business principles, and not confined to any one city, but proposes to take in what is generally known as the Northwest, and the sign under which it proposes to win is "Northwestern goods for Northwestern consumers"—Minneapolis Journal.

A PHOTOGRAPHIC STAR MAP.

How Astronomers Are Getting a Picture of the Sky.

In 1887 a congress composed of fifty-eight astronomers from sixteen different nationalities met at Paris and formulated a scheme for the production of a photographic star map. The scheme having received universal approval, the necessary instruments were constructed, and the work with them is now well advanced. Two English observatories are taking part in this self-appointed task—Greenwich observatory and that of Oxford university.

The telescopes employed by all the co-operating astronomers are constructed by Sir Howard Grubb. Two tubes are rigidly connected, the lower being merely a long camera, and the upper an ordinary telescope. The astronomical photographer uses the telescope as a view-finder. When he sees through it the bit of celestial scenery of which he desires a permanent picture, he places a sensitized plate in the lower end of his long camera and starts the clock which keeps the telescope moving at the same rate as the vault of heaven.

The instrument can then be left to itself, for it will do the sky-sketching automatically. More than twenty-two celestial scenes will have to be photographed in this manner, and the patchwork map which they produce will cover the surface of a globe nearly twenty-four feet in diameter. Before turning each sensitive plate heavenward a network of fine lines is imprinted upon it, which serve a similar purpose to the lines of latitude and longitude upon this world of ours.

The stellar images appear together with the intersecting lines upon the resulting pictures, so their relative positions can be very accurately determined.—Good Words.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Killed by Carelessness.

Mary Berg, a domestic in the employ of D. M. Dyer, St. Paul, was shot and killed by Mr. Dyer's son, Harold, 14 years old. The shooting was accidental. The lad was sitting in the doorway shooting at rats as they ran in and out of the barn. Harold knew that the servant girl was afraid of firearms, and he concluded, so he says, to play a joke on her. He extricated the bullet from one of the caps and put the unloaded shell in the rifle. Then when he heard the girl approaching the doorway while attending to her duties around the kitchen, he pointed the rifle in her direction and pulled the trigger, intending only to frighten her by the explosion of the cap. He says he didn't suppose he had the weapon pointed directly at the girl, yet simultaneously with the report she screamed and fell to the floor, where she lay with wide-open eyes and an expression of terror on her face. A tiny stream of blood trickled down from a hole in the right temple just over the eye, showing where the bullet had struck. When Harold became fully aware of the seriousness of his practical joke, he alarmed the household, and Dr. Robert A. Wheaton was immediately summoned, but before he arrived the girl died, having lived about 20 minutes after being shot.

Educational.

The state committee on arrangements for the meeting of the educational association met at the office of Supt. Pendergast. Mr. Shepard was appointed to select headquarters for the Minnesota delegation at Asbury Park, where the meeting of the association will be held in July. Mr. Denfield was appointed local managers to arrange for parties for the trip. The Grand Trunk and Lehigh railroads were selected as the official route for those wishing to go to the association by way of Chicago.

An Ugly Welter.

Ben Wache, employed at the Commercial club in Minneapolis as a second cook, received four deep cuts in the head and neck from a cleaver in the hands of a waiter named Dick Ware. Wache ordered Ware out of the pantry. There were some words and Wache tried to eject the waiter, who grabbed a cleaver and made a vicious assault on him and then escaped. Wache's injuries were not fatal.

THE OLD SPITE LANE.

The Spite Lane runs along the line 'twixt
Slocum's farm and ours,
A narrow space between each fence where nothing grows but flowers.
The relic of a silly feud that smoldered many years,
That caused harsh words between the men and roused our mothers' fears;
A country quarrel long ago, a quarrel firm and set,
Here where lives are narrow and people won't forget.
We children keep the quarrel not, although its mark is plain,
For there between our meadows green still runs
the old Spite Lane.

Sometimes when father sits about, at peace with all the world,
The country paper on his knee, the smoke
wreaths 'bout him curled,
I drop a hint on foolish spites that run to cruel ends,
And how much nicer it would be if neighbors all were friends.
He'll snap out: "No! I'll fight it out! Them
Slocums can't beat me!"
But he ain't as hearty in it now as what he used to be;
When 'cross the line he'd shake his fist and fairly almost swear, While ol' man Slocum with his men would holler: "Jest you dare!"
But, then, those times, I think, are gone; they'll never come again—
And some bright day we'll tear away the silly
old Spite Lane.

For, often in the eventide, when at the pasture bars
The cowbells tinkle in the dusk beneath the summer stars,
Sweet Laura Slocum steals away to meet me once again—
No angry words can then be heard across the old Spite Lane.
Old feuds, old hates, old quarrels harsh, young hearts can end them thus.
The fences mark a lovers' lane just wide enough for us.
The Spite Lane runs along the line 'twixt
Slocum's farm and ours;
It marks a path of sullen wrath—but naught grows there save flowers!

A PLOT SPOILED.

Why Mr. Willoughby Didn't Get a Wished for Loan.

The sun had just dipped behind the steely surface of the frozen river; the chill of coming twilight sent a tremulous shiver through the woods, tinkling the icicles like a string of fairy bells as it went.

"Good, seasonable weather," thought Squire Merriford, as he came out to look at the big thermometer that always hung, summer and winter, beside the porch door. "Halloo, Steele! Is that you?"

"Yes, squire, it is I," said Milford Steele. "Is Josephine at home?"

"She's at home, but—the fact is—she's pretty considerably engaged just at present."

"That means, I suppose, that Leslie Willoughby is calling?"

Squire Merriford made no direct answer, but stared hard at the thermometer.

"Perhaps," went on the merciless catechist, "you could let me have the money you promised toward the church debt this evening? There is a vestry meeting the day after to-morrow, and—"

The squire coughed dubiously.

"Well, the fact is," said he, "it ain't convenient just at present. The church'll have to wait. I'm makin' arrangements to let out all the cash I can spare now on bond and mortgage. A man don't get such an opportunity every day, Steele, you know."

"I should think not," said Steele, dryly. "Nine per cent. seems like a very nice little arrangement, but suppose the question of usury is raised?"

"It won't be," said the squire, confidently. "It's between friends, you know."

"I need not ask who this liberal-hearted friend is," said Mr. Steele; "Mr. Willoughby, of course."

"Suppose it is!" cried the squire testily; "what then?"

"Mr. Merriford," said Steele, earnestly, "you are an older man than I am, yet I cannot forbear from entreating you to pause and reflect before you invest your whole property in such an unsafe speculation as this. What do you know about this Leslie Willoughby?"

"I know he's Chief Justice Chapman's nephew."

"He says so."

"And he owns four thousand acres of land out west."

"According to his own account."

"And he might be a member of congress if he chose."

"Rather improbable that."

"And he owns a lot o' property in the upper part of the city of New York."

"Pardon me, but I do not credit all this. I sincerely believe that he is deceiving both you and your daughter."

The squire grew very red in the face.

"I wasn't born yesterday, and it ain't for you to set up to dictate to me. And if Josephine fancies him more'n she does you—"

"She is quite welcome to her preference," sharply interrupted Steele. "Good evening, Mr. Merriford."

He walked quickly away down the snowy road, the blood boiling in his veins. He loved Josephine Merriford heartily—he respected the good-hearted old squire, but just now he felt that he was almost banished from their counsels.

"If I could but prove all that I suspect," murmured he to himself as he crossed the little bridge that spanned a brawling rivulet.

A hand fell on his shoulder at the same instant.

"Hallo, Sprowle! I'm punctual to the second, you see."

Steele stared round, without immediately answering to this unexpected greeting.

"Well, then, Mr. Leslie Willoughby, Esq., if you like that better," cried the stranger, with a burst of laughter. "Have you raised that sum of money, yet? That's what I want to know. Because old Samuels is getting crusty, and— The deuce!"

Just at that moment, looking full into his face, the stranger discovered his mistake.

"I am not Leslie Willoughby," said Steele composedly, "but I can tell you where he is. Just at present he is making love to Squire Merriford's daughter, and trying to induce the old man to lend him money."

"That won't do, you know!" cried the man, who was evidently a little the worse for liquor. "Nohow you can fix it, that won't do. No lovemaking! 'Cause he's married to my sister Eliza, Peter Sprowle is! I don't blame him for not livin' with Eliza—she's got a temper like vinegar; but he ha'n't no business to make love to another girl—not while I'm around."

"You have arrived just in time then. Perhaps you wouldn't mind letting the young lady know that your friend is already married."

"I'd just like to put a spoke in Pete Sprowle's wheel! I believe in honor among thieves; but I'm hanged if I don't think Pete means to do me this time."

Josephine Merriford was a very pretty girl, cherry cheeked and dimpled, with innocent hazel-dark eyes and a red, laughing mouth; and the fire-light made a fair picture of her as she sat by the great, old-fashioned hearthstone, with Leslie Willoughby suspiciously close to her.

"It's easily done," coaxed Mr. Willoughby, stroking his long, waxed mustache. "Just to step down to the nearest parson's—and, whew! we're off to New York, man and wife, by the evening train."

"But poor papa, Mr. Willoughby!"

"He won't mind, once it's over. I can easily telegraph to him from New York. By Jove, won't that meddling old beau of yours—Steele is his name, isn't it?—stare?"

And Leslie Willoughby indulged in a hearty laugh at the idea; but Josephine colored, and then grew pale.

"Don't Leslie," she replied: "Milford Steele has always been a good and true friend to me/"

"I dare say, I dare say. Well, Josie, just you get your father to advance that one hundred dollars and we'll give 'em all the slip. We'll take the eight train—"

"No, you won't—not if I know it," interrupted a gruff voice. "For my sister Eliza, your lawful wedded wife, Pete Sprowle, you know—she ain't neither dead nor divorced. And you're no more Justice Chapman's nephew than I'm stepfather to Queen Victoria—and your name ain't Willoughby—and you're a confounded scoundrel and a villain, Pete Sprowle—that's what you be."

And Leslie Willoughby, struggling to his feet with a face of wrath and confusion, found himself face to face with his respected brother-in-law and coplotter and Milford Steele.

"Slanderer! this is your work!" gasped he, aiming a blind blow at the latter.

"And I am proud of it," declared Steele: "or, rather, I shall be, when I've kicked you out of this house."

Word and deed were simultaneous, and in another second Josephine and Steele were alone in the room.

"Oh, Milford!" she faltered, "can this be true? or am I dreaming?"

"It is true, Josie, that you are saved—that yonder miscreant is a married man, as well as an unprincipled adventurer."

"Dear Milford, how can I ever thank you?" she murmured, lifting her soft brown eyes to his face.

"I will tell you, Josie—one of these days."

Squire Merriford could hardly believe his own ears when he heard the tale.

"I came precious near being an old fool," observed he sagely, and there was some truth in his remark.—Chicago Mail.

DIZZIED BY SUCCESS.

Ludicrous Antics of a Great Man Upon a London Street.

James Hinton, the celebrated aurist and essayist, was one of those men who are absolutely oblivious to the impression made upon the world by their own eccentricities of demeanor. He was an odd little man. As some one once said of him: "There never lived a man with a whiter soul, a warmer heart or a shriller voice." He wrote a book that set the world talking, and also leaped at once into a fine medical practice. One day J. C. Jeaffreson was walking along a London street, when he heard his own name uttered in a high treble. He says:

"Turning quickly round, I saw a little, fragile man dancing about the pavement in high excitement, to the considerable inconvenience of wayfarers. It was James Hinton. Jumping up to me, he shook my hand, with convulsive tags, as he ejaculated:

"'I am so very glad, so inexpressibly glad to see you! I have so often wished to see you and tell you all that has happened!'

"Having, by this time, shaken my hand with more than sufficient cordiality, he stepped back a few paces and, in doing so, blundered against a stout lady, and knocked a small boy down into the gutter. After viewing me in the right perspective, he danced up to me again, and then danced before me, ejaculating in the highest notes of his shrill voice:

"'I am so delighted to see you! There is so much for us to talk about! So many things have happened that I want to tell you about! Do you know, I am a successful man, a very successful man? I became a success all in a minute. Isn't it ludicrous? You never expected me to be a successful man. No one thought it in the least degree possible that I should be a success. No one! no one! no one! See! that's my carriage! Those are my horses! Is it not absurd? Do, my dear fellow, say it is a bsurd that I should drive about London in my own carriage!'

"Having thus, in complete innocence, entertained a London crowd by his antics, he stepped into the wonderful carriage and drove away, beaming."

Understood English Well Enough.

A North-sider of a musical turn of mind was starting down town recently when the strains of a hand organ played by an Italian across the street reached his ear. He recognized the music as a popular aria from "Semiramide." The harmony was perfect and the impresario at the crank was conducting the performance with excellent judgment as to tempo.

Startled at hearing music of such a class from the much abused hand organ the North side citizen stopped and listened. The organist finished the aria, made some change in the interior adjustment of the machine and started it again. The selection this time was from "Lohengrin," and the performance was equally good.

When the music ceased the listener crossed the street, took a coin from his pocket, gave it to the organ grinder, and said:

"Do you understand English?"

"Yeh," replied the impresario, pocketing the coin and grinning delightedly.

"Then I want you to play that last piece again."

The organist grasped the handle of his machine, turned it with renewed vigor, and the suffering atmosphere for blocks around vibrated with the agonizing strains of "After the Ball."—Chicago Tribune.

—During the most of the sixteenth century the English people called the Bible the Bibliotheca, or the Library, this word being limited in its application to the Scriptural writings.

PROTECTION'S CRIMES.

McKinleyism the Curse of Honest American Labor.

There is a repetition of history in the story of riot and bloodshed that comes from the coke regions of Pennsylvania. Its proportions are less formidable than those of the uprising at Homestead, in the Hocking Valley and in the coal regions of Tennessee; but it springs from the same causes and is illustrative of the same evils. It is not a mere coincidence that all these deplorable affairs occur in sections of the country where the privileges of protection are greatest and the support of McKinleyism is strongest. They are among the legitimate fruits of that nefarious system; inseparable from its active existence. Where it professes to operate for the good of the "poor workingman" and is maintained especially for the amelioration of his condition, is where he suffers most from grinding poverty and all the train of evils that troop in its wake.

McKinleyism has been the curse of honest American labor. Duty has been exacted upon every imported article entering into our manufactured products except the most important one of labor. That has passed our ports free. It has come in cargoes at the expense and solicitation of protected American capital. The lowest and cheapest order of pauper European labor has been imported to operate our mines and do the rougher work of our furnaces, coke ovens and other "infant" industries. Without sympathy for our institutions, ignorant, brutal and content with far less than will meet the requirements of a self-respecting workman in our own country, these free importations have worked for far less than a good man should receive and the protected barons well afford to pay.

Cheap labor and swollen profits taken from the consumers under the special privileges of protection, stimulated production beyond the demands of a restricted market, concentrated more labor at the centers of production than could be maintained in employment, the inevitable result appearing in enforced idleness of many and less than a living scale of wages for the rest. This has been the history of the great strikes in this country and will continue to be until our tariff laws are made for the entire nation and not for the favored few, whose enormous wealth thrives upon the legislation which it is enabled to secure.

Strikes were comparatively unknown before the high protective system was put into effect by the republican party. Up to that time the wealth of the people was more equitably distributed, individual effort was not crushed out by the ruthless power of combination, and the man who was willing to work was assured of the comforts which a country like this should afford to all its citizens. The deplorable change has been wrought by misguided tariff legislation, and the happier conditions thus sacrificed will be restored by wiping out the laws responsible for McKinleyism.—Detroit Free Press.

A MENACE TO BUSINESS.

Republican Maladministration Recoiling Upon the Democracy.

The country is now reaping the logical effects of the recent republican victories. These victories are accepted as the consequences of hard times and the delay in repealing the McKinley bill. As the republicans wish to win more victories they are resolved to perpetuate the hard times and continue the delay as far as they can. This is simply the operation of the law of supply and demand.

When Senator Harris proposed to extend the daily sessions of the senate in order to afford facilities for discussion, he was interrupted by an objection from one of the Pennsylvania senators before he had time to formulate his proposition. Mr. Frye stated he was in favor of postponing the tariff bill till next December, as he believed that it would do more harm than the war did. Mr. Quay said he would not work extra hours in order to pass a bill that would be the ruin of Pennsylvania. Both these senators must be credited with too much ability to permit them to believe the extreme things they said about the bill. But the whole tendency of their remarks was to disclose an inclination to obstruct the passage of the bill, and to keep the business element in suspense. They are satisfied that business depression will help their party.

The menace to the country from this conspiracy arises from the fact that there are democrats in it. Some of these democrats are probably willing to allow the McKinley bill to remain in force. It does not seem to have occurred to these senators that a new revenue bill is absolutely necessary, even from the standpoint of protection, to which they seem to have become converts. The McKinley bill is not yielding sufficient revenue. There is a deficit in the treasury, which must continue to grow larger so long as the business depression continues. The republicans can contemplate this deficit with equanimity, since their opponents, having a numerical majority in both houses, are responsible for legislation. But the democrats cannot permit the present situation to continue without confessing their inability to enact the necessary legislation to carry on the government. The democrats who aid and abet the republicans in this conspiracy of obstruction can never in the future enjoy the respect of the masses of their party.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

——Until the civil war brought upon us the series of high tariffs that began with Morrill's and ended with McKinley's, the wealth of the United States was pretty evenly divided, not only as between north and south, east and west, but also as between the two great interests—agriculture and manufactures. The democratic party had been in substantially continuous ascendancy in the government from the inauguration of Washington to that of Lincoln. Its leadership and legislation were all that time untainted with the corrupt influences of the great vested interests that are nowadays based on the protective system, and which, as Senator Voorhees justly said in his speech opening the debate in the senate, have succeeded in placing it "under the duress of a small majority" of that body.—Baltimore Sun.

——The difference between the Mr. Reed's billion dollar congress and its successor, on the score of expenditure, is that the Reed congress deliberately set to work to increase expenditures, while the congress which followed it found itself under obligations to continue the rates established before it came into power. Of course, Mr. Reed knows this perfectly well, but he omits to mention it.—Boston Herald

IGNORANCE OF M'KINLEY.

Shallow Sophistries of the Apostle of Protection.

Gov. McKinley's Minneapolis speech was a labored attempt to prove that if a ten or twenty per cent. tariff in the early part of the century was a good thing for the country, one that ranges from sixty to eighty per cent. is absolutely necessary for our existence today. Tariffs which upon an average did not impose duties of more than a quarter of the percentage levied under the McKinley bill were held up as fine examples of protectionism, while the Wilson bill, a comparatively high protective measure, was denounced as free trade.

It is by such claptrap as this that McKinley hopes to win the presidency in 1896. The preposterous argument is paraded that import duties should increase with the advance of civilization until they become nearly if not entirely prohibitory. Once give a man the right to rob his neighbors of five per cent. of their earnings and it is only a question of time when he will take everything, except a bare and miserable living for his victims. That has been the history of all legalized robbery and it is the record of protective tariffs in the United States.

The old pretext for "protection" was that infant or feeble industries ought to be encouraged by the government. McKinley's idea is that all American industries are perpetual infants and can only exist by the constant contributions of consumers. So impotent and helpless are American manufacturers, according to republican opinion, that, even after thirty years of the pap-feeding policy, the mere promise by democrats to cut off a part of their unearned rations precipitates a panic. That is protectionist doctrine in 1894 as preached by its chief exponents and proclaimed as "patriotic" and "American."

The next republican candidate for the presidency thus explains his belief on the question of taxation: "We must either tax ourselves and our property, our lands and our investments, or we must tax the products of other nations seeking a market here."

The idea sought to be conveyed here to his ignorant and partisan hearers was that imported goods belonged to foreigners and that taxes levied on them would be paid by people in Europe. As goods only come here when bought by some one in this country, all tariff taxes fall, not upon foreigners, but first upon our own importers and by them transferred to American consumers.

McKinley's gross ignorance of rudimentary political economy ought to consign him to political oblivion, if his attorneyship for the great American tariff thieves has not brought him such a fate already.—Chicago Herald.

THE TARIFF AND WAGES.

Facts Brought Out by Official Statistics of Manufactures.

The census bulletin giving the statistics of manufactures by states explodes completely the protection theory that tariffs regulate wages.

If this contention was true wages in the same industries ought to be substantially uniform throughout the states subject to the same tariff law. That this is not the case the tables conclusively prove. The variation is greater between different states of our union than it is between the average of wages in this country and the average in England.

It is shown by this bulletin that the mean average wages paid in the entire country in all manufacturing industries except mining and quarrying, for 1890, was $484 per hand.

Among the states falling below this average were these: Alabama, by $110; Georgia, $177; South Carolina, $217; Maine, $154; New Hampshire, $101; Wisconsin, $92.

Among the states exceeding this average were Colorado, $246; Montana, $238; Massachusetts, $10; New York, $65; Pennsylvania, $8; Wyoming $284.

The obvious lesson of these figures and of the rest of the table is that wages depend upon the productivity of the workmen, the demand for labor, the efficiency of labor organizations and the cost of living, not upon a tariff law which may permit but never constrains protected employers to pay more than the market rate for wages.

Wages in manufacturing industries are higher in some states than in others, and are higher in this country than in Europe, because the workmen produce more—that is, are more intelligent, have better machinery or work longer hours—or because there is a greater demand for their labor or a higher cost of living and a stronger union of laborers to maintain their just demands.

Intelligent workingmen know this. The census bulletins prove it.—N. Y. World.

OPINIONS AND POINTERS.

——Gov. McKinley is now attributing all the evils of the country to fear of tariff reform. Last summer he made several speeches proclaiming that the democrats were responsible for those evils because of their delay in assembling in extra congressional session and repealing the Sherman act.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

——Gen. Green B. Raum assures us that President Harrison has had enough of office holding, and that he will not be a candidate for renomination in 1896. Green B. knows some things, for he was pension commissioner under Harrison, and is believed to be on intimate terms with the ex-president.—Iowa State Register (Rep.).

——According to the Tribune "the democratic party has to learn that it cannot draw a large revenue from a people by impoverishing them." The republican party learned that it could impoverish a people by drawing a large revenue from them. The sufferings of the country from McKinley taxes and billion dollar appropriations led to the republican overthrow. The democratic party is not afraid of impoverishing the people by reducing their taxes.—N. Y. World.

——The tariff organs have overshot the mark. In their eagerness to demolish the Wilson bill they have exploded mines under the McKinley bill. They have succeeded in demonstrating the tyranny and iniquity of the sugar trust and the very words that they have used in denouncing that organization can be applied and are being applied by intelligent republicans to the steel rail trust, the wall paper trust, the window glass trust and other McKinley beneficiaries. The protection newspapers have been pouring shot and shell into their own camp and they are too stupid and too ignorant to realize the damage they are doing to St. McKinley and his disciples.—Chicago Herald.

CHILDREN'S SAYINGS.

IT HAS NO EQUAL, NO SUPERIOR. ALONE THE BEST.

The subject of the above portrait is the Rev. Chas. Prosser, a much beloved and most devout minister of the gospel at Mount Carmel, Northumberland Co., Pa. Mr. Prosser's usefulness, was, for a long time, greatly impaired by a distressing, obstinate disease. How his malady was finally conquered we will let him tell in his own language. He says: "I was a great sufferer from dyspepsia, and I had suffered so long that I was a wreck; life was rendered undesirable and it seemed death was near; but I came in contact with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and his 'Pleasant Pellets.' I took twelve bottles of 'Discovery,' and several bottles of the 'Pellets,' and followed the hygenic advice of Dr. Pierce, and I am happy to say it was indeed a cure, for life is worth living now."

For dyspepsia, or indigestion, "liver complaint," or torpid liver, biliousness, constipation, chronic diarrhea and all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels, Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery effects perfect cures when all other medicines fail. It has a specific tonic effect upon the lining membranes of the stomach and bowels. As an invigorating, restorative tonic it gives strength to the whole system and builds up solid flesh to the healthy standard, when reduced by "wasting diseases."

Mr. J. F. Hudson, a prominent lawyer of Whitcherville, Sebastian Co., Ark., writes: "Having suffered severely, for a long time, from a torpid liver, indigestion, constipation, nervousness and general debility, and finding no relief in my efforts to regain my health, I was induced to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Pleasant Pellets.' Under this treatment, I improved very much and in a few months was able to attend to my professional duties."

Yours truly,

J. F. Hudson

To purify, enrich and vitalize the blood, and thereby invigorate the liver and digestive organs, brace up the nerves, and put the system in order generally: also to build up both solid flesh and strength after grip, pneumonia, fevers and other prostrating diseases, "Golden Medical Discovery" has no equal. It does not make fat people more corpulent, but builds up solid, wholesome flesh.

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, have fullness or bloating after eating, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, frequent headaches, "floating specks" before eyes, nervous prostration and drowsiness after meals?

If you have any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from torpid liver, associated with dyspepsia, or indigestion. The more complicated your disease the greater the number of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it.

Nervousness, sleeplessness, nervous prostration, nervous debility, and kindred disturbances are generally due to impoverished blood. The nervous system suffers for want of pure, rich blood to nourish and sustain it. Purify, enrich and vitalize the blood by taking "Golden Medical Discovery" and all these nervous troubles vanish.

The "Golden Medical Discovery" is far better for this purpose than the much advertised nervines and other compounds, so loudly recommended for nervous prostration, as they "put the nerves to sleep," but do not invigorate, brace up and so strengthen the nervous system as does the "Discovery," thus giving permanent benefit and a radical cure.

Buy of reliable dealers. With any others, something else that pays them better will probably be urged as "just as good." Perhaps it is, for them; but it can't be, for you.

Lethal Cemetery Seepage.

Special to The Journal.

WEST UNION, Iowa, May 2.—It is reported that lately so large a number of deaths have occured at Clayton Center Clayton county, that the people have gone to work to investigate the case. It transpires that the town is located at the foot of the hill and that a cemetery is situated on the side of the hill so that water naturally drains off to that part of the town where people have been in the habit of getting their water for drinking purposes. It is thought this explaines the unusual mystery.

County Cullings.

Local issues should not be made too much of at our county elections, little petty matters should be settled in other ways than by defeating party candidates.

It is expected that some of the state conventions will be held next month. Be on the lookout don't miss attending the town or village caucus and loose opportunity to have a say in who shall be our nominees, send good delegates.

Senator Eaton, it seems ie to be given the nomination for County Attorney, by republican slate-makers; Tarbox, Judge of Probate; Wharton, Superintendens of schools; but it is easy to rub out some and substitute others on a slate.

Democrats are keeping pretty quiet now but when convention time rolls around we expect there will be plenty on hand to assist in nominating a ticket that will win voters. This way of putting on men to carry of the county knowing their inability to carry an average vote other places is to be condemned. Men wholly fit for positions for which they are nominated should be chosen.

At the meeting of the County Commissioners held on the 1st day of May it was voted to allow the Waverly and Buffalo road petition about which there has been considerable fuss. Mattson and Reems voted against it, while Roscoe went over to the affirmative with Bugbee and Flannigan.

Bugbee, Roscoe, and Flannigan were appointed a committee to look after the Cokato and Clearwatter road. May 7.

Flannigan, Bugbee, and Reems to examine into the case of the Sampsel bridge road, May 10.

Bugbee, Flannigan, and Reems were appointed to look after repairing Court House.

The Tariff on Barley

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Representatives Lockwood, Tracey and other New York members are closely watching the barley item of the tariff bill, and are relying mainly upon Senator Murphy's familiarty with the brewing business to secure an arrangement of the barley schedule satisfactory to New York. Several conferences have been had with the senator, during which the barley tarriff has been discussed. The New York brewers draw their supply of barley from the great crops of Canada, and with a nominal duty the Eastern men haye a prospect of commanding the brewery buisness of the country. But the Western interests, particularly those centered at Milwalkee, St. Lewis and Cincinnati, draw their supplies maidly from American farmers, and can get along without the low-duty barley of Canada. With crop Canadian crop keep out by a high duty, the Westerneers have a prospect of commanding the market. The Western men were well satisfied with the high rate of 40 per cent fixed in the senate bill but now the Eastern men are at work to bring the rate down, and they feel that they will succeed.

Teachers' State Summer Training School at Buffalo.

The State Summer Training School for the Teachers of Wright county, Minn., will open at Buffalo on July 16, 1894, under the conductorship of Prof. W. F. Webster, of the East Side High School of Minneapolis, assisted by Prof. Otis C. Gross, of New Ulm and Miss Julia B. Clifford, of Minneapolis. Prof. C. H. Congdon, musical director of the schools of St. Paul, will give special instruction in vocal music during the first week of the school and eighty minutes will be given to his work in the forenoon and sixty minutes in the afternoon, thus providing our teachers with excellent advantages in this line.

Commencing with July 23rd the hour from four to five p. m. will be given to penmanship for ten days under the instruction of an accomplished penman.

A special instructor in physical culture will be provided if a sufficient number desire to take up that branch, and a weekly tuition fee of fifty cents will be charged such teachers to defray the expense of such instruction.

All other departments of the school will be free.

The classes will be arranged in groups and each teacher may select one study in each group but teachers are advised not to take more than four branches; less than four will be apt to result in time idled away.

Study One Hour.

During the stay of Prof. Congdon the programme will be modified and sufficient time given to the study of music so that our teachers will have a thorough drill in that branch. Also during the lesson in penmanship the study hour will be devoted to that branch.

Every teacher in Wright county should be present at the opening of the school and be prepared to stay the entire term. Any teacher who comes and remains less than a week will be treated as a visitor and such teacher will not be recognized as a member of the school. However, all who come shall have the full privileges of the school although they remain only a day. Our object in this rule is to discourage those teachers who come to look around for a day or two and then go away "members of the summer school." After the close of the seventh day of the school no new teachers will be enrolled without they render valid excuses why they were not present at the opening of the term.

School boards will be asked not to employ teachers who neglect to attend the summer training school. "Good wages, well trained teachers and faithful work" should be the motto of school board and school teachers. Neglect any of those points and as a rule the people suffer. Teachers should supply themselves with text books: any good text book will answer.

In pedagogy we will use Emerson E. White's School Management and the work with outline costs one dollar.

In Literature we will use as text books Berard's History of England and The School Master in literature. These two books with outlines cost $2.30.

We will use the state reading circle outlines and thus have two objects in view, reading circle work and the study of literature.

All of the above named works can be had of the county superintendent or directly from the publishers. If ordered by mail 15 cents extra per volume must be added to cover postage.

Board can be had at about three dollars per week and teachers who desire assistance in finding a boarding place should apply to the county superintendent, who will be found at the American House.

F. H. LINDSLEY
County Superintendent.

THE GAY CHARIVARI.

NORTHFIELD, Minn May 4.—[Special]—Report comes from Lester tonight, 12 miles southwest of hear, of a battle between 40 masked men, who repaired to the home of Fred Herdler, a well-to-do ane respectable German farmer, who was married a few days ago, and attempted to charivari him. Some 30 guests were seated at the table at 10 o'clock, when the leader demanded $10 to bup bear for the crowd. The demand was refused and $3 offered instead. The door was closed in the intruder's face and a few minuits later the gang returned, smashed in the door and the fight issued in which revolvers were used. Three unknown men of the gang were shot and seen to fall, whether dead or not no one knows, as they were hastily taken away. The masks were torn from the leaders and arrests were being made.

ILLEGAL FEES.

Washington, May 4, —The Iowa board of examining surgeons has recently refunded, through the pensiin bureau the sum of $1,140, which has covered into the treasury. The law provides that examining surgeons shall only receive gee for examinations actually participated in. In the case of this board it appears that on July 29 1891 one of the physicians was absent in attendence on a base ball game; from Aug. 19, 1891, to Oct. 7, 1891, another member of the boark was sick and absent and during the entire year of 1893 another member of the board failed to take part in the examinations. Every member of the board sumitted an account of full fees, certerfying that he had been present at every examination. Each of the physicians refunded $380, which was accepted by the United States without waver of suit for futher repayment and without assurance from immunity from criminal prosecution.

THE FIRST IDEALIST.

A jellyfish swam in a tropical sea,
And he said: "This world it consists of Me;
There's nothing above and nothing below
That a jellyfish ever can possibly know
(Since we've got no sight or hearing or smell)
Beyond what our single sense can tell.
Now all that I learn from the sense of touch
Is the fact of my feelings, viewed as such.
But to think they have any external cause
Is an inference clean against logical laws.
Again, to suppose, as I've hitherto done,
There are other jellyfish under the sun.
Is a pure assumption that can't be backed
By a jot of proof or a single fact,
In short, like Hume, I very much doubt
If there's anything else at all without,
So I come at last to the plain conclusion,
When the subject is fairly set free from confusion,
That the universe simply centers in Me.
And if I were not, then nothing would be."

That minute a shark, who was strolling by,
Just gulped him down in a twinkle of an eye.
And he died with a few convulsive twists.
But, somehow, the universe still exists.

THE second strike on the G. N. was threatened quite seriously, this week; on account of the refusal of the Railroad authorities to give employment to men who deserted their engine on the track. But it has been averted by all men going to work until they have been found guilty, according to law.

FROM the Globe we lear there is a war on the committee appointed by the last legislature to purchase the battle field of Burch Coulie, and erect thereon a suitable monument. It seems a majority of the committee living not a great way from the battle ground want to have the monument placed two or three miles away, near the town of Morton, which was not theught of until long after the battle. The survivors of the war, on the committee, desire to have the monument where they did the fighting with the Indians; where their brother soldiers lell; where it ought to be. Of course the majority has it in their power to outvote the minority: but it looks as if a monument was to be created it should be placed where the battle was fought.

No More Fusion.

Minnesota Democracy seems to be waking up to the fact that fusion is not what it is cracked up to be. There has been a disposition on the part of some to make a bargain with the Populists and, with a mongrel ticket, bound to fail to satisfy even those who are instrumental in getting it up, even if it chance to be elected; democrats expecting men elected by their votes to be democrats, and populists expecting all to support Populistic doctrines, neither realizing their expectations are disgusted with the swapping business.

The proper thing for men to do is to find the party most to their liking; the party that is on the right side according to their way of thinking, on the live, and important questions of the day, and do their best to have men nominated to offices that believe honestly in the doctrincs of their party and ask everybody to help elect them. Then they can conscientiously work for their tickets provided their candidates are men worthy to fill the positions. But when "shelligosters" are saddled on to the tickets, no one cares particularly to labor much to have them elected. There is no better way to disorganize an army than to give it a set of officers in whom they do not have faith as leaders; and there is no better way to defeat a political organization than to fuse it with some other, and place in the field for votes, men with directly opposite opinions. Everybody respects the man that has opinions of his own and dares stick to them; and everybody respects a political party with principles; and the purer they can present them to the people, the more help will they receive from them. We were much pleased to read in a recent issue of the St. Paul Globe that, in their opinion, fusion this year would be a bad thing, and to see them advocate standing by our colors. Thats right.

The Legislature.

The suggestion of the state central committee to the county central committee that they provide for the nomination of candidates for the legislature at the time delegates to the state convention are chozen in order to seperate the nomination of the legislative from the county candidates, seems to be in the interest of better legislative material. As it is now, it is very easy for county candidates to trade off votes for candidates for the legislature in order to advance their own interests, and as long as it is possible to make such trades the chances for getting good material for the legislature are comparatively small. On the contrary if the canidates for the legislature were elected at the county convention which elects delegates to the state convention, there would be a better chance of making nominations for the legislature without their being influenced or controlled by the interest of county delegates, and we need better stuff in the legislature- Some very important legislation is demanded at the approaching session, and it is more than ever important to every district that it should be represented by a man of character and ability.—Minneapolis Journal.

McGary on Coxey.

INDEPENDENCE, May 14.

EDITOR BUFFALO GAZETTE:—In my younger days I knew of a song or ballad entitled, "The spring time has come, gentle Annie." After months of cold and frost, ice, and sleet, rain, and snow, we are once more in the midst of spring time; the trees are putting on a heavy coat of foliage. The air is fragrant with sweetness from the blossoms of early spring and all nature seems full of life and animation even the Coxeyites seem to be enthused with new life and vigor.

We have now about six months to plant, sow, cultivate, reap and gather a harvest; from which to feed us and the Coxeyites for another year. We have never been much of a symphtizer with the Coxey movement and yet in this case I can't help but be reminded of Balaam and ass, "What have I done unto thee that thou hast smitten me these three times" "Numbers 22c- 28v.

"And Balaam said unto the ass because thou hast mocked me; I would there were a sword in mine hand, for now would I kill thee"—verse 29.

Why was it that the authorities at Washington arrested Coxey and two of his subordinates, for treading on the grass in the capitol grounds, and wanting to speak from the capitol steps. I thought the laws of this country guaranteed to its subjects, free press, an free speech. If Coxey had been at the head of one or two hundred lobbyists, come to Congress to demand certain legislation for the bankers, bond holders and manufacturers they would have been received with open arms and been banqueted beside, the same time. "Again the ass opened her mouth and said unto Balaam, am not I thine ass upon which thou hast ridden ever since I was thine unto this day? was I ever wont to do so unto thee? And he said nay."

Many say the Coxeyites are nothing more nor less than a hoard of tramps, to lazy to work and earn an honest living, no doubt, in part, this is true, but we believe there are many good men among them. But how about these lobbyists that go to every session of Congress by the fifties and by the hundreds, with bleared eyes and bloated cheek; steeped in a liquid solution from which eminates a stench strong enough to knock down Balaam's ass. They go there to lobby for some corporation to get Congress to enact or repeal some law as the case may be. They are received and allowed there by those in anthority, or at the head of the government at Washington, D. C. At the same time most of these laws gotten through Congress by the lobbyists, is a benefit financially to the monied class but a detriment to the masses of the people. "Consistency thou art a jewel" But I have spent time and breath enough over the Coxey movement for one time. Now that Coxey has been arrested and tried by the courts, and found guilty. I am reminded he is in about the same condition as was Moses when he was not allowed to go over the Jordan into the promised land, and so Coxey was not allowed in the capitol grounds. Moses on the banks of the Jordon issued his valedictory and Coxey should do likewise, and might substitute Moses address for his own which in the beginning runs thus. "O you Israelites and fellow soldiers who have been partners with me in this long and uneasy journey etc." from Josephus.

May Heaven's highest blessings rest upon all the Coxeys past, present, and future.

Excitement at Dawson, N. D.

Special to the BUFFALO GAZETTE.

DAWSON, N. Dak., May 14. There is great excitement here over wholesale charges of theft laid against no less than 42 of the citizens of Dawson and yicinity. Investigation, however, reveals the fact that these startling criminal allegations are only a part of a blackmailing scheme calculated to head off a movement that has been on foot for several weeks past, to have postmaster J. W. Hurd removed. Hurd bears a very bad name, and the man (?) who is supposed to have furnished the information that induced the states attorney to issue warrants against so many of our best citizens was, with the exception of an influential and highly respected Dawsonite who has since turned from the erring postmaster, the most instrumental in getting him the appointment. The Sheriff and a number of railroad detectives came to town to arrest our citizens by the wholesale, but it is now reported that one or two unprincipled characters who had been bribed to give false testimony went back on the Smart Alleck who designed the nefarious scheme, and no arrests were made. There is great indignation among the citizens here and it was with difficulty some of the best men in town induced a mob to refrain from taking a rope and hanging the perpetrator of this most nefarious outrage upon an honest and law-abiding community. The people were charged with stealing coal from the railroad company, and the design was to represent to the Washington authorities that the people whose names appeared upon the petition praying for Hurd's removal, already sent in, were coal-thief suspects.

Democratic Traitors.

The Minnesota Democracy has been timely in branding Senator David B. Hill, of New York as a traitor to his party, but they should have gone farther and denounced Representative W. P. C. Breckinridge as a law breaker instead of a law maker. They should have entered a timely protest against his renomination and election.

In his confession of being a man of passion, he should have added his lust for a good fat office and salary. The great responsibility that devolves upon Congress must certainly require some standard of morality. An idle people watching an idle Congress takes its effect in the army of the commonweal. If Kentucky thinks she must honor the name of Breckinridge; if she thinks she must give him office, let her petition President Cleveland to have him sent to Turkey as a Minister, where his illicit love might find a proper home in a Turkish Harem.

But as for me, I would as leave see Brigham Young return from hell to make laws for me and fluttering society, as see Breckinridge returned to Congress by democrats.

Every day we are forced to think that this experimental Republic can wisely experiment upon the election of U. S. Senators by a direct vote of the people. The standard of the morality for statesmen can only be raised through the instrumentality of the free press of the land.

H. E. CRANDALL.

William Kennedy.

Edward L. Murphy, who was elected from the 9th ward to the position of alderman in St. Paul, the other day, is an Irishman and a Roman Catholic. The A. P. A. made him a target for their most venemous arrows. No lie was to vile for them to utter about Mr. Murphy. And it is a disgrace to the country in which we live that even the reptile republican press would give publicity to such scandalous falshoods as were published about Mr. Murphy. It was even said that he kept a house of ill-fame. This statement can be found in the Delano Eagle and the Pioneer Press, papers whose very names are synonymous with falshoods and slander. The facts are, Mr. Murphy came to St. Paul about ten years ago without a dollar. He took off his coat and went to work at anything he could get to do. He shoveled on the streets, worked in sewers, worked in slaughter houses, and earned an honest penny in any way he could, all the time saving his money. He finally started in the butcher business, and by industry, economy, good management and honest dealing, built up a good and large trade. He became a property owner and rented some of his buildings It is said that some ladies occupied the rooms over his butcher shop, and received company at unseasonable hours. This little circumstance was magnified into the gross exageration that Mr. Murphy kept a house. The lie was started by the A. P. A. in the hope that it would be believed and cause Mr. Murphy's defeat at the polls. But the good people of St. Paul, who had observed Mr. Murphy's honerable course in life for a decade, were not to be so easily deceived. They voted for Mr. Muryhy, and his election is a deserved rebuke to the Pioneer Press, the Delano Eagle and the A. P. A. Narrow-minded people are continually sneering at the Irish; but wherever an Irishman has half a chance he wins his way. The Irish are coming to the front, and they will command the respect of the whole civilized world very soon. They now have control of most of the great cities of the United States and I expect to see an Irishman in the presidential chair if I live a dozen years longer. An Irishman makes a good politician. He is ridiculed, laughed at, slandered, and run down in every way, but he is almost invariably elected. When we were running Hon. Edward Egan for county commissioner in Hennepin county they lied about him, but their lies amounted to nothing. He was elected by a handsome majority- the people knowing he would make a good commissioner. Mr. Egan is also an Irishman and a Catholic. An old Englishman named Bull, in the southern part of the county, thought Mr. Egan would not come within gunshot of an election. But Mr. Egan was elected just the same, and it is popularly conceded he is making a mighty good commissioner. WM. K.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 11, 1894.

The more the democrats study the proposed amendments to the Wilson tariff bill, and the cause which led up to their adoption by the subcommittee the less they object to them as a whole, when the ammendments were first made public there were some extremely vigorous protests from democratic Senators and Representatives, and for a time it looked as though the concessions made in those amendments might prove to be but another case of "jumping out of the frying pan into the fire," but today the fealing is decidedly better, and the impression general, regardless of politics, that the proposed amendments will all be adopted and the bill passed by democratic votes. Even Senator Hill is expected to vote for the bill, although it is understood that he has about made up his mind to first test the sense of the Senate regarding the income tax, by moving that the bill be recommitted to the Finance committee with instruction to report it without the income tax. He declined postively but politely to make any additional statement concerning his intentions, since the amendments were made public. There are few democrats, however who believe that his vote will be cast against the bill when it is put upon its passage.

President Cleveland, all the members of the cabinet in the city, most of the Justices of the Supreme Court, and a large number of prominent officials, members of Congress and citizens of Washington went to Fredericksburg, yesterday to see and take part in the ceremonies attendant upon the unveiling of the monument to Mary Washington in that city. Today those who had not before been familiar with it are loud in their praise of "old Virginia hospitality," known and appreciated throughout the civilized world as unsurpassed and unsurpassable.

Secretary Hoke Smith made no mistake when he determined, about a year ago, that the contract for printing the Patent Office Gazette should be open to competitive bidding every year. Last year the savings were comparatively small—about $10,000—and the scandal involving the name of Hon. Josiah Quincy with the successful bidders, the National Lithographing Co., followed; but this year's bidding enables the Secretary to have the work done by the same old concern that did it for years and at a price nearly $60,000 below what was paid for it for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893.

Coxeyism is tottering on its last legs in Washington. Coxey, Browne and Jones counted upon being acquitted when they were tried for violating the laws for the protection of the Capitol building and grounds, and they have not yet recovered from the shock of being convicted. They have applied for a new trial, but there is not the slightest probability that they will get it. They may be fined or imprisoned, or both, in the discretion of the Judge. The commissary department at the Coxeyite camp has begun to get low and the men are now only given two meals a day, and desertions are getting quite frequent. The health officer of the Distric of Columbia is also after them with a sharp stick, having reported their camp to be a menace to the health of the entire city, and given them a peremptory notice to put it in a healthy condition or get out. Force has been added to this recommendation by information stating that two deserters from Coxey's army were down with smallpox at Philadelphia. Coxey is trying to curry favor by declaring that he has no connection with the various bodies of men headed for Washington and styling themselves Coxeyites. The House committee on Labor gave him ten minutes to make an ass of himself and he did it in half that time.

Public Printer Benedict took charge of the Goverment printing office this week, and he is already up to his neck in the work of reducing the force which has been kept far to large by Mr. Palmer, because he did not care to discharge any of the republicans and was compelled by democratic Senators and Represenatives to put on a few democrats. Mr. Benedict says: "The condition of the force is without precident. There are 3,594 persons on the rolls, and when I stepped out before I left 2,182. We cannot accommodate so many; there is no place for them to work. Employes are now working only from one-half to one-third time; daily furloughs being a regular thing. This force has got to be reduced down to a working basis, and I shall do it as soon as possible. "The Republicans in this office are all looking for their discharge, and I violate no confidence in saying that the most of them will get what they are looking for. They certainly have no right to complain. It is more than fourteen months since the democratic administration came into power.

The Annandale Post correspondent from this town says, in last week's issue that we have abused him most desperately, and he don't know the reason why we did so. It is easily explained to him; when he was asked to correspond for the Post, last winter he thought it was something great and he could rule this town, and make fools of the young people by impudently abusing them. He speaks of old sores; there are none if he speaks the truth; but he was never known for truth and veracity. If he gives items true and nothing but the truth we will let the matter drop; but if he don't we will make our appearance in the columns of the GAZETTE, every week, as it is known to be one of the most widely circulated papers in Wright county.

Binding Twine.

Henry Wolfer, warden of the penitentiary, at Stillwater has sent out a lot of samples of the prison made binding twine. The twine is of hemp, grown in Minnesota, Iowa and Kentucky, mostly. Mr. Wolfer says:

"This twine will be sold the present season at a price not to exceed 7 cents per pound, and lower, if necessary, to meet competition of any twine of any length and quality that may be placed on the market, said price to be finally determined by the Board of Managers June 1, 1894. All the purchasers of twine previous to that date will be entitled to the benefit of any reductions below seven cents that may be made by the Board. There need, therefor, be no hesitancy in placing orders now, as the prices will be adjusted as above indicated." Farmers who will need twine this fall, if they like the twine, will do well to place their orders in time. Call and get a sample at the GAZETTE office. We have a full ball for examination. 26tf

Woman's Column.

EDITED BY MRS. E. A. STACY.

"Thoughtlessness is the curse of the age, once get the people to thinking and the country is safe.—Phillips.

A movement is now on foot to interest the young women of our colleges in the work of the W. C. T. U. Since the young men in the colleges have become largely interested in prohibition, it would seem as if the young women ought to keep step helping in the W. C. T. U. work.

John Stuart Mill said. "My Liberty ends when it begins to involve the possibility of ruin to my neighbors".

The Outing Committee of the Central Union, Minneapolis, are now ready for active work and already the visiting committee are looking after the children of the poorer districts. Many were last year given a new lease of life by being able to spend a few days in a christian home, and in the sweet country air, away from the vice and contagion of the city. Will not ladies who can the comming summer, give a home to a mother and child, or to children for a little time, please send their name to Mrs J. N. Ellis, 1408, 4 Ave., S. Minneapolis?

Anti-Cigarette League.

Mr. Hubbell, of the board of education, New York, started some months ago an anti-cigarette league which has been organized in nearly all the public schools in the city, with the hearty cooperation of the president of the board of education and the city superintendent of schools, who says that much good is being accomplished.

Cincinnati, Philadelphia, San Francisco and other important cities have undertaken a similar work. The pledge is to abstain from smoking cigaretts until the age of 21 years is reached, and to influence other boys to do the same. A button is provided as a badge. Mr Hubbell says:

"Within the past ten years, and more particularly during the past five years, a vice insiduous and demoralizing has fastened itself upon the youth of the country and especially upon our school boys, in a way to call for the most earnest efforts to stamp it out, and that is the vice of cigarette smoking. The crusade is under way and the crusaders are on the march.

"The anti-cigarette movement has for its object the creation of a sentiment against the vice among the boys themselves. This is attained by first pointing out the evils that attend and follow it, giving the boys of each department a short earnest talk. After consultation with his parents the boys are asked to sign the pledge.

"There is a law in this state, and in many of the states, both against the sale of cigaretts to boys under sixteen as well as against the use of the same by boys under that age. More, however, is to be expected from the boys themselves in the efforts to correct the evil, than from the enforcement of the law. The pedagogic value of this scheme is apparent to all those having to do with school affairs. The ethical value of it is too apparent to seem to require any plea in its behalf. The good that may come from the enrollment of 60,000 boys for so good a cause in our great city is incalculable. The good that must follow certainly justifies our efforts."

There is no doubt that some good may be accomplished by this movement. It seems to lack in one important particular. Its promoters have no grievance against tobacco itself, only against this particular form of its use, whereas almost all that can be said against the cigarette may with equal truth be said of tobacco in any form, only perhaps the cigarette does its deadly work more rapidly. Then this movement only serves to protect the boys until they are twenty-one. Of course they will be better off not to have used the deadly cigarette during their younger years, but they would be still better off not to use tobacco in any form at any period of life. Some members of the W. C. T. U. are becomming interested in this movement. Might it not be well for them to use their influence to have the movement take on a character which will make it of permanent value and of thorough protection from a habit acknowledged to be useless and hurtful?

The W. C. T. U. does not believe in any half-way measures.

THE death of United States Senator Francis B. Stockbridge, of Michigan, is the sixth that has occurred among the members of the senate since the election of the present congress in November, 1892. Randall L. Gibson, of Louisiana, died in the following December and John E. Kenna, of West Virginia, in January. Those who have died since were Leland Stanford, of California, Alfred H. Colquitt, of Georgia, Zebulon B. Vance, of North Carolina, and lastly Senator Stockbridge. Mr. Stockbridge was in his second term, which will expire in March, 1899.

It will be a notable anniversary, too, for it will commemorate the beginning of a work that has been world-wide in its influence for good. The Salvationists may be derided for their outer garb and their unusual methods of work, but it cannot be denied that they have accomplished great good in bringing a knowledge of the truths of religion to the poor and forsaken sons and daughters of men.

THE annals of the Pasteur institute in Paris for 1893 have just been published. They show that last year 1,648 persons were treated for hydrophobia, and that only six of them died of the disease. Of the number mentioned there were 1,470 French people and 178 foreigners. Since M. Pasteur began to practice his inoculations against hydrophobia 14,430 persons have been treated by his method, of whom only 72 have died of the disease. What proportion of the others would have suffered from the disease if they had not been treated it is impossible to say, but the showing is a good one.

Patriotic Women Pay Tribute to Washington's Mother.

Interesting Ceremonies at Fredericksburg, Va.—Eloquent Addresses Delivered by President Cleveland and Senator Daniel.

THE DEDICATION.

FREDERICKSBURG, Va., May 12.—The monument to Mary Washington, mother of the first president, was unveiled here Thursday. The procession to the monument included various patriotic societies and benevolent orders, companies of the state militia, the governor's staff, and representative ladies on horseback.

The Ceremonies.

Ceremonies began with prayer by Rev. James P. Smith, followed by a brief address by A. P. Rowe, mayor of Fredericksburg. Gov. O'Ferrall followed with an impassioned address of welcome on the part of the state of Virginia, and in an eloquent peroration presented the president of the United States. For several minutes the enthusiasm which greeted the president was without bounds.

President Cleveland Speaks.

When the cheering finally subsided President Cleveland said:

"Nothing can be more important to those who have assumed the responsibility of self-government than the cultivation and stimulation among themselves of sentiments which ennoble and elevate and strengthen humanity. As a clear and wholesome stream must have its flow from a pure fountain head, so must a clean and beneficent popular government have its source in pure and morally healthy men. This purity and this moral health are in nothing better exemplified than in a love and reverence for motherhood. The man who said he cared not who made a people's laws if he could write their songs, might have said with more truth that he could gauge the strength and honor of a people, and their fitness for self-government, if he knew the depths and steadfastness of their love for their mothers. I believe that he who thinks it brave and manly to outgrow his earlier devotion to his mother is, more than he who has no music in himself, fit for treason, stratagems and spoils, and should not be trusted. Let us recall to-day as conclusive proof of the close relation between American greatness and a lasting love and reverence for our mothers the proud declaration of George Washington: 'All I am I owe to my mother;' and let us not forget that when his glory was greatest and when the plaudits of his countrymen were loudest, he valued more than these the blessing and approval of his aged mother.

"While these exercises cannot fail to inspire us anew with reverence for American motherhood, we will remember that we are here to do honor to the woman who gave to our nation its greatest and best citizen, and that we have the privilege of participating in the dedication of a monument erected by the women of our land in loving and enduring testimony to the virtues of the mother of Washington. Let us be proud to-day that the nobility of this woman exacted from a distinguished foreigner the admission: 'If such are the matrons of America, she may well boast of illustrious sons;' and that Lafayette, who had fought with her son for American independence, declared after he had received her blessing: 'I have seen the only Roman matron living at this day.'

"Remembering these things let us leave this place with our love of country strengthened, with a higher estimate of the value of American citizenship, and with a prayer to God that our people may hold fast to the sentiment that grows out of a love and reverence for American motherhood."

An address in behalf of the descendants of the immortal George was delivered by Lawrence Washington. As the American flag which has veiled the monument was drawn aside, disclosing the shaft to view, the Marine band from Washington rendered the "Star Spangled Banner" and the spectators cheered for several minutes.

Senator Daniel's Oration.

The formal oration was delivered by United States Senator John W. Daniel, who reviewed eloquently the facts of history concerning the mother of Washington, which are known, and discussed the spirit of the times in which George Washington was reared.

Reception and Banquet.

President Cleveland held a reception after the exercises at the Mary Washington house and shook hands with several thousand persons. While the president was holding his reception most of the other distinguished guests were entertained at a masonic banquet at the opera house by Fredericksburg lodge No. 4, the lodge in which George Washington was made a mason.

The president after the reception went to the banquet. He was introduced to the gathering and spoke briefly. He said that while not being a mason he had the "honor to belong to a great fraternity, one of which George Washington and Andrew Jackson were prominent members, a fraternity whose grip means a united stand for American interests, whose password is 'the people's cause under all circumstances;' whose temple is not as old as the temple of Solomon, but as old as American institutions; a fraternity that can never die, for its fruits will always be before the world. Would you know the name of this fraternity? It is the brotherhood of free and accepted and patriotic American citizens."

PUT OUT OF THE WAY.

Fiends Murder Witnesses Who Were to Have Appeared Against Them.

MILAN, Mo., May 14.—Gus Meeks, his wife and two children were murdered outright Thursday night near Browning, and another of the children—a girl of 7 years—was so injured that her recovery was doubtful. A number of criminal cases had been pending in Lynn and Sullivan counties against William F. and George Taylor, brothers. Meeks and others were also indicted. Meeks pleaded guilty at the last term and went to the penitentiary, but was later pardoned by the governor that he might testify against the Taylors.

It is said the Taylors had arranged with Meeks to give the latter a wagon and team to get out of the country so that he might not be present when the case against the Taylors was called for trial. From Meeks' mother it is learned that on Thursday her son received a letter from the Taylors at Browning, telling him to be ready at 10 o'clock that night to go away. Gus Meeks and children waited for Taylor until midnight, when two men whom Meeks said were George and Bill Taylor came to their home in a wagon. Meeks and his family got into the wagon and started for Browning.

The details of the crime, as near as can be obtained, were told by the little 7-year-old girl, who was suffering greatly as she recited the story. It appears that when the Meeks family and the persons accompanying them reached a point near the schoolhouse in Lynn county, a short distance east of Browning, they were met by two other men who were lying in wait. Gus Meeksw as first shot and Mrs. Meeks jumped.

She also was killed. The murderers then took stones and beat the brains out of the two children and left the other for dead. The murderers then, it is supposed, loaded the whole family into the wagon and hauled them nearly 2 miles to the Taylor farm, where they were buried under a strawstack.

People Cry for Vengeance.

VIENNA, May 14.—The funeral of the victims of the Troppau riot took place in secret at daybreak Friday. The cemetery was surrounded by a cordon of soldiers. The ten victims were buried in a common grave, the coffins being carried to the cemetery and to the grave by soldiers. During the interment crowds of desperate people surrounded the cemetery vowing vengeance for the murder of the miners. The feeling of indignation against the authorities has been further increased by the fact that the prefect has refused to allow the relatives of the many wounded to visit them in the hospital.

Stricken in the Pulpit.

PHILADELPHIA, May 15.—In the midst of his sermon before a large congregation in the Emanuel M. E. church Sunday Rev. John W. Langley was stricken with paralysis and fell to the floor of the pulpit. The pastor, who is over 60 years of age, entered the pulpit apparently in his usual good health and began his sermon. He was speaking with earnest eloquence of the uncertainty of life and the great need of preparation for the after-life.

A Young Boy's Suicide.

FINDLAY, O., May 15.—As the result of disappointment in love Paul Ewing, 15 years old, son of Dr. M. J. Ewing, a prominent physician of this city, took forty grains of morphine, from the effects of which he died in three hours. A peculiar feature of the affair is that another boy had agreed to also end his existence in the same way, but failed to do so, and is now prostrated at the result of his friend's act.

Death of a Judge.

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 15.—Judge Westcott Wilkin, for thirty years judge of the district court, died Saturday night. January 1 he fell upon an icy sidewalk, breaking his leg at the hip, and never recovered from the shock. Judge Wilkin was born at Goshen, N. Y., in 1827, graduating at Princeton in 1843. He came to St. Paul in 1856, and was elected judge of the district court in 1864.

Stabbed to Death in Church.

LAWRENCEVILLE, Ill., May 14.—At the New Hope church, in Lukin township, southwest of this city, Sall Belt stabbed Ira Smith in the abdomen with a pocketknife. Smith lived but a few minutes. Belt was captured and brought here by Sheriff Cochran. Belt claims that the cutting was done in self-defense.

Ten Buildings Burned.

RED JACKET, Mich., May 14.—Firebugs set fire to the barn of John Dunslan at 1 a. m. Friday, and before the flames were gotten under control ten business buildings were destroyed. Loss $30,000; partially insured. Several families lost all their household goods.

SPRING HOUSE-CLEANING.

Helpful Hints From Experience for the Afflicted Housekeeper.

Among the special trials of the housekeeper and her family, the annual visitation of house-cleaning looms up with forbidding menace. It suggests colds, influenzas, possible pneumonia and doctor's bills and a general and somewhat protracted term of rufiled temper, weariness and irritation.

The old-time house-cleaning, when the entire establishment was, so to speak, turned out of doors, has gone its way in many families, and a much better, easier and more comfortable plan has been tried, and proving eminently satisfactory, has been adopted. Under this new rule, cleaning is done on what might be called the installment plan.

Instead of tearing the house all up at once, one or more rooms are cleaned each day until all are finished. First, put the attic in order and scrub the floor. Remove all outside shutters and have them cleaned and put away until needed. Take up all hall and stair-carpets, or if this is not liked, leave the lower hall and stairs and cover the carpets with canvas or crash. It is well to provide a large bag of saw-dust, and two or three quarts of this, made as damp as possible, without dripping, should be scattered over the floor of the upper hall and swept about over the bare floor and stairs. This will take up all dust and leave the floor quite clean. The furniture and all other articles in one room may now be wiped off and removed to another apartment or, if there is room put on one side of the hall. Do not place it so that it will be in the way and may be upset and broken or retard the progress of the work. Above all, do not, unless imperatively necessary, leave heavy articles in a room, to be lifted or rolled back and forth where carpets are to be taken up and put down.

Begin work on the top floor. After the tacks in the carpet are all out, begin at one edge and fold it over as nearly as possible in the half, fold again and again, until it is one breadth wide, fold over the ends until it makes a parcel as small as possible, tie with a rope and carry it downstairs. If you have neighbors, do not throw it out of the windows, as you may distribute much unneighborly dust.

Take up the carpet lining, placing one length over another, roll from the ends and tie up in the same way. This saves a great deal of dirt and dust that would otherwise be scattered on the hall and stairs. Sweep the floor with damp saw-dust, gather this up and carry it away. It may be thrown upon the coal-bin and is just so much additional fuel. If there are cupboards or clothes presses they should have been cleaned out before the furniture is removed.

Brush the ceiling, walls, windows and woodwork. A clean, soft cloth wound around a new broom is one of the very best of ceiling and wall cleaners. Clean the painted woodwork thoroughly. Common baking soda, a heaping tablespoonful to three quarts of water, is good for scrubbing. This should be done very quickly and the paint should be rinsed in clear water and wiped dry at once. If there are no finger-marks and only a little dust, clean water with a little spirits of turpentine will be sufficient. Afterward rub the woodwork with a woolen cloth wet in spirits of turpentine, being careful not to touch the paper. Clean the windows with alcohol and water, half and half, and polish with tissue paper, or newspapers crumpled in the hand until they are soft. Some housekeepers go over all the woodwork in the room with a woolen cloth wet with turpentine or kerosine oil. Both leave an odor that is offensive to some persons; the former is preferable because it evaporates almost immediately, while the latter must be carefully wiped off or it will accumulate and hold dust.

When windows and woodwork are clean, throw more damp sawdust over the floor and sweep thoroughly, taking care that all cracks in the floor and under the edge of the base-board are brushed free from dirt and lint. Scour the presses and cupboards, then scrub the floor, going over a small portion at one time, using as little water as possible and drying it immediately. If the day is clear, open the windows and let the air and light in. If the room is not needed at once, let it remain over night with partly open windows, to get the full benefit of the airing.

If the work is carefully planned and begun early, the floor may be quite dry by the middle of the afternoon, and, if necessary, the carpet may be put down at once. Layers of paper or carpet-lining should always cover the floor under the carpet.—N. Y. Ledger.

"THERE are times," said the man with the oratorical manner, "when we are overwhelmed with humiliation at the powerlessness of the human mind." "That's very true," was the reply; "I am often made to feel so." "Indeed?" "Yes. I have a four-year-old daughter who asks questions."

A PATIENT should pay his doctor as soon as he gets well, just to show there is no ill-feeling.—N. O. Picayune.

LAY OF THE MODERN MINSTREL.

I do not sing the martyred brave,
Who dared and died for liberty,
Nor those who breasted wind and wave
To win a world across the sea;
Nor yet the knights of olden days,
Whose name and fame were England's pride,
Whose valor poets vied to praise,
And every victory glorified.

I do not sing the fair and fond,
Whose charms both king and slave have sung,
Whose scepter, love, since being dawned,
Has swayed the hearts of old and young;
Nor is my lyre attuned to laud
The worth of wealth, or wit, or wine,
Which shallow sonneteers applaud
At ten or twenty cents a line.

I do not sing of snow nor spring,
Of flowery fields, nor moonlit glades,
Of birds that whirl on tireless wing
Through all the summer's lights and shades;
Of none of these; they're out of date;
I've laid them all upon the shelf;
My theme is one of greater weight—
I sing of nothing but myself!

—Arthur Grissom, in Hallo.

THE BELFRY LIGHT.

A Touching Romance and Tragedy of the Sea.

"Now, who's that at the door this time o' night?" said Aunt Keziah, without stopping her needles.

But we spoke not a word; only Dolly, who sat on the stool beside me, clasped her hands on her blue-checked apron and her eyes looked large and bright in the firelight.

"Well"—Aunt Keziah peered over her spectacles—"why don't you get up'n see?"

Then Dolly turned her gaze on me, and I put down the wood I was whittling into a boat and went to the door.

As I unlatched it another knock sounded, and then a gust of wind swung it open and pushed me behind it, and at the same time blew in a queer, witchlike figure, who, with her long cloak flapping about her, seemed swept straight to the fire on the gale. She stood there, her black eyes snapping first at Aunt Keziah, then at Dolly, while I forgot to close the door.

"Why, Mother Sheflo, how did you get across the meadow this night? David, shut the door," said Aunt Keziah.

"With the wind! With the wind!" the little old woman spoke in a cracked voice; and as she reached to stand her stick in the chimney corner, Dolly shrank back almost off the stool.

"Well, it's a wonder you don't get your death, that's all," said Aunt Keziah, still knitting. "David, fetch a chair."

Mother Sheflo perched herself on the proffered chair. Her feet did not reach the floor. Her quilted hood showed loose strands of sparse gray hair, and her eyes blinked sharply as she seized my jacket sleeve with one hand, which I thought looked like a bird's claw.

"Nice boy, good boy!" she said, peering into my face. "He don't throw stones—no, no!"

I flushed hotly with guilt, and refused to meet her piercing eyes, for the day before I had thrown a stone at Captain, Mother Sheflo's cat, as I passed her cottage; and all the village knew that Mother Sheflo's cat was wondrous wise.

"No! no!" she repeated.

"No!" said Dolly, and then put her finger in her mouth.

Mother Sheflo's eyes blinked rapidly. "Bad boys stone Captain, and he knows 'em! Ay, he knows 'em all, every one! He follows 'em about! He knows a bit, does Captain! Nice boy, good boy!" The last words were addressed to me, and she smiled sidewise as she released my arm. I drew back, relieved, into the shadow of the chimney. Dolly was twisting her apron into a knot, but her great eyes were on Mother Sheflo. "Get my death, you say, Keziah Allan? Get my death?" croaked the old woman. "Not this night! There's death out yonder on the sea; there's life on land—life, life!" She began to croon to herself. Her skinny hands were locked together and her eyes were on the fire.

"You must ha' caught it, then," said Aunt Keziah, "or you'd never ha' got way over here in a wind like this."

"I ride! I ride!" muttered the old woman.

"'Tisn't a broom," said Dolly, putting a plump finger on the cane in the chimney corner and drawing it back suddenly.

"Ho! ho! Hear the baby! Would you like to ride some night, my pretty one, up, up, up where the doves whisper in the belfry?"

Dolly shook her head with a frightened look and drew back nearer me.

"Ah! you're afraid the naughty boys will stone you for a white dove? Naughty boys, not good ones, like him!" She pointed a skinny finger at me, and in the shadow I felt her black eyes reading my thoughts, for that very day I had stoned a belfry dove, and the doves belonged to Letty, the parson's housekeeper.

"How they chatter and whisper, the doves that fly through the village, and carry away the words and doings of men! I know 'em! They've told me many a thing o' wild nights when I've gone to see if the lamp was set. Nights like this—the kind that washes 'em in, washes 'em in! Go look"—she nodded at me—"go see if the lamp is set in the belfry."

I went to the window and drew the curtain. A great wind shook the house. I heard the breakers battling far off, as I loved to imagine them in the night, making through the darkness the sounds of drum and cannon. Outside was solid blackness, save for one streak of light which shone straight outward—the light in the belfry tower.

"It's there," said I, returning to the chimney corner.

"So that's what brought you," spoke Aunt Keziah to the old woman. "I thought as much! Why don't you keep in your bed a night like this? The parson'll have the light set, never fear!"

"I couldn't lie quiet this night, not this night of Hallowmas, for thinking of 'em being washed in. The other was such as this, and the light went out—the light went out!"

She chanted the words, gazing into the fire.

"What put it out?" I asked, sitting down beside Dolly.

"Spirits! Bad spirits!"

"Humph! Owls and bats, more likely," said Aunt Keziah.

"They don't trouble it, you know that, Keziah Allen! It don't stay set unless I keep my eye on it, for the night they all washed in, it went out! The light went out!"

She crooned the words over and over, with her eyes upon the fire.

"It has gone out more than once when you were the first to notice it, that's the truth," said Aunt Keziah, her needles flying. "I don't believe you ever sleep o' nights!"

"Not nights like this, I can't lay quiet in my bed," said the old woman.

"Why not?" I asked, growing bolder.

"Spirits," she cried, with a sudden flame in her eye. "They're about such nights, boy, and they move the light, and in the morning they're all washed in—washed in on the sand!"

"Law, Mother Sheflo, there ain't been any wrecks washed in for a long time, and no spirits have been about in my day," spoke Aunt Keziah, soothingly. "I've heard tell of 'em often enough, but they must have left these parts a many a year ago. It's nothin' but the wind and the bats that puts the belfry light out."

But the old woman did not seem to hear her. She looked straight at the fire. Her fingers worked nervously and her lips moved.

"Tell about 'em," I said, and Dolly nodded shyly. Then Mother Sheflo uttered in rapid monotone the words she seemed to have been saying to herself. Her eyes were still on the flames. The wind shrieked in the chimney as she spoke.

"'Twas Becky and Mary Anna Steele and Marthy Allan—your mother, Keziah"—

Aunt Keziah nodded.

"All a-bakin' in the kitchen, a-gettin' ready for the weddin'. Big cakes and little cakes, an' hams, an' pies, an' chickens—rows an' rows of 'em. Marthy Allan a-reddin' up 'n' puttin' spruce and pine over the pictures, an' wipin' chiny, an' me in the winder. All day in the winder, lookin' 'cross the bay. Breakers like them a-roarin' now. Hear 'em! Listen to 'em! That's the kind! They'll wash 'em in! It was John Allan come runnin' up the path. I saw the wind bring him along. He burst in with the wind and spray, an' Marthy Allan dropped the best blue bowl.

"'There's a boat yonder,' he says—'his boat!'

"'Husb!' says Mary Anna, noddin' at the winder, an' John Allan throws up his arms and runs out, 'n' I after him, an' Marthy an' Mary Anna comin' behind. Ay, but 'twas gettin' dark, an' a monster sea was roarin'. We all stayed out a-waitin' for the boat. It got mighty dark, dark as night, an' we couldn't see a thing. I got a lantern out o' the kitchen an' climbed the belfry stairs unbeknown to 'em all. Ugh, but the bats hit hard an' screeched like all of 'em was doin' out yonder on shore! They hit my face and blinded my eyes, but I didn't mind. I set the lamp in the winder an' went down again—down, down. It shone far out to the boat. Ugh, how the breakers fought that night! He always could manage a boat, couldn't he, Keziah?" Aunt Keziah nodded.

"Then all of a sudden the light went out—clean out, Keziah!" The old woman's black eyes flashed.

"So I've heard tell," said Aunt Keziah.

"All were screechin' for light. They might ha' reached 'em. John Allan said so. They wouldn't let me go out 'n the water with one. I'd ha' done it, but 'twas all John Allan a-holdin' me on shore. But they were all washed in with the mornin'. Aha, they couldn't hold me then! 'Don't let her go!' cries Marthy, a-hangin' to me. But didn't I fling her down, an' away I went to meet 'em all a-layin' on the sand.—Come early to the weddin'!—They wouldn't let me carry him, John Allan wouldn't, but I went along, an' my hair blowin' on his face. I put on my white frock, an' my wreath on my hair—pretty hair, Keziah—"

And again Aunt Keziah nodded.

"An' I laughed at Marthy Allan an' Mary Anna a-cryin' an' wringin' their hand. 'Twas a nice mornin.' Go look"—the old woman suddenly turned her eyes from the fire, with a return of reason in them—"go look if it's set;" and again I went to the window, and again saw the line of light streaming from the belfry tower.

"Yes," I said, "it's there."

"Ay, then I'll get home," she muttered, and, reaching her stick, she wrapped her cloak around her and hobbled to the door.

"Are you going to ride in the air?" asked Dolly, whose eyes were heavy with sleep.

"Aye! aye! Hear the pretty baby! Yes, honey, I'll go on a puff o' wind!"

"Maybe you'd best stop here," said Aunt Keziah. But Mother Sheflo was at the door.

"Captain's awaitin'," she said, and as I lifted the latch she gave me a tap with her stick. "Nice boy, he don't throw stones—no, no!"

The wind rushed in and swept her outward into the darkness. I heard the breakers lash the beach, and the door slammed.

"Did she really first set the belfry light?" I asked, once more by the fire.

Aunt Keziah nodded.

"Long before my time. They say it's saved many a vessel, too."

"What put it out that night?" again I asked.

"Your grandmother used to say nobody ever knew. Owls or wind, most likely. They say the ship might ha' kept off the cape rock if there' been a light, but before another could be set it went down."

"Oh!" I exclaimed, and thought awhile. Dolly's curly head had drooped forward, and in the firelight her cheek was the color of the big roses Aunt Keziah kept for her jar of leaves.

"What did she mean by a wedding?" I asked, presently. "Whose wedding was it?"

"Her own," said Aunt Keziah, winding her yarn; "it was his boat. That's when her mind went, that night. She set a light in the belfry every night for many a year, till she got so old the parson got her out o' it and had it done. She's got some sense left, but she likes to tell the story over and over. Now, go to bed, both o' you!"

But Dolly could not get awake, and I took her in my arms. Her head dropped on my shoulder, and, as I started upstairs slowly, she murmured:

"Goin' to ride up 'n' up with the doves." Resting a minute on the steps, I kissed her rosy cheek, and looked back at Aunt Keziah.

"I wish I had known about it before," I said.

"Why?" she asked.

"Before I threw stones at Captain."

"Oh, yes; the cat's all she's got now."

Aunt Keziah looked up, with the hearth-broom in her hand.

"David," she said, "you'd best remember always that when folks are cranky in this world, there's most times been a heap to make 'em so, only other folks don't think o' that part."—Outlook.

PLEA FOR WILD FLOWERS.

A Danger That Some of Them May Be Exterminated.

The importance of protecting our forests, wild game and native songbirds is no longer questioned, but the work begun in these directions should include the preservation of beautiful, curious and useful plants indigenous to our woods and fields. In many instances, those who could prevent their destruction are indifferent to the rapid disappearance of wild flowers. Among the forces active in this extermination are the woodman's ax, the drainer's spade, the farmer's plow, the herdman's sheep and the collector's trowel. There are other causes of perhaps minor importance, which are of too much significance to be entirely ignored. To a more enlightened public opinion, the establishment of Arbor day and to wholesome legislation, we must trust to the preservation of our woods and of the lowly plants that only thrive under their shade. If the farmer's mind were enlarged by broader culture he would spare a few rods of swamp land as nature dressed it. The lily would then be allowed to brighten the fence-row, and the clematis, with its feathery plumes, might be left to drape his fences without subjecting the owner to the charge of shiftlessness. And as sheep graze much closer than any other domestic animal, they are peculiarly destructive to plant life. In many instances they are allowed to graze in woodlands with other stock when they might as well be kept in other pasturage.

The species of wild plants which disappear most rapidly are those possessing, or supposed to possess, medicinal qualities, as the blood-root, sarsaparilla, orange-root and ginseng. Professional root diggers gather supplies each succeeding year from the same section as long as the yield is profitable. When they have so nearly exterminated the plant that the gathering no longer proves remunerative, new fields are sought in which to repeat their depredations. It is stated that ginseng can be cultivated successfully, and the production of ginseng may yet become a paying business. Many other wild plants also admit of cultivation. I heard complaints last Decoration day that plants, such as the trillium, once plentiful in this locality, are now almost exterminated by overgathering. Plant collectors are charged with being largely responsible for the extermination of wild flowers, and this is, perhaps, true in a way. But, after all, collectors are among the most active agents indirectly in perpetuating them, among town and city people, by giving an opportunity to buy them, and among country people by awakening them to the fact that native plants are worth money, and, consequently, worth keeping; for many people see no value in anything excepting the cash value.

If wild flowers are to be saved from extermination the people must be educated to understand their beauty and usefulness. Natural plantations in city parks make their value known, and the florist, who is each year adding new species to his stock of native plants, is also a teacher. But there is, perhaps, no better way in which to reach the masses than through the country schools. Teachers should call attention to the marvels of plant-structure and plant-life, and Arbor day exercises should not be called complete until a bed of wild flowers is made a part of the decoration of the school yard. The daily study of the plant, its habits and development will prove an efficient aid in the advancement of elementary science; a source of inspiration that will purify and make nobler the lives of all who come within its influence.—Garden and Forest.

A SURGEON'S LIFE IN CABUL.

Personality and Habits of the Ameer of Afghanistan.

At a recent meeting of the Indian section of the Society of Arts Mr. John A. Gray put his life with the ameer into a narrative of engrossing interest beginning with his journey thither. Four-fifths of the country, he says, are rocks and mountains. The mountains vary from fifteen thousand to sixteen thousand feet, except in the Hindu Koosch range, where some peaks are twenty thousand feet. The other fifth of the country is exceedingly fertile, with delightful valleys, where there are gardens, orchards of fruit trees and great stretches of vines. There are fields of corn, barley, rice and maize, and patches of brilliantly green clover. The peasants are exceeding clever in the art of irrigating.

The manufactures of the country are few. One is that of a thick woolen cloth of a brown color, called barak—something like Irish frieze. It is made from camel's hair and is used for coats. The Cabul people have a saying that "You can wear your coat for five years, have it turned, wear it five more, then give it to your servant."

Mr. Gray describes the ameer's workshop as extensive for a small prince. It contains a small steam hammer, a stationary engine, lathes, cartridge plant and a minting machine. Trained Hindustanee workmen are brought from India to work the machines under the direction of Mr. Pyne and his European assistants. The townspeople are not pure Afghans, but a mixed race of Afghan, Persian and Hindustanee. They are excellent copyists, but are not satisfactory in the results of their attempts to evolve an original design. Mr. Gray was a month in Cabul attending the two hospitals and seeing a great number of patients. They flock to a European doctor. When he arrived the ameer was in Turkestan, and sent for Mr. Gray to join him.

The ameer he found a man of presence, broad and stout. He is fair skinned, sun-burned, with black hair and beard. He has a good square head and piercing eyes. Dignified and courteous, on occasion he can be exceedingly fierce, and no chief dare speak or sit in the ameer's presence without permission. The surgeon's work was heavy, remittent fever decimating the troops. He had to treat the ameer for a cold, and found him a well-informed and most entertaining man.

A custom he has struck Mr. Gray at first as unusual. It is that he takes out his artificial teeth in open durbar, cleans them with a toothbrush and then replaces them. Mr. Gray, however, thinks this impresses the people that their king is one who can take himself to pieces. Mr. Gray vaccinated the young prince, who is heir to the throne by right, prescribed for the sultana, and painted portraits of the royalties. His health giving way was the cause of his return.—London Globe.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Stillwater Washed.

The rain the afternoon of the 9th did at least $50,000 damage to the city of Stillwater, to say nothing of damage that private citizens will have to stand. Nearly 200 feet of Third street was washed away and one of the walls of the Sawyer house was washed out.

A small shoe shop on Myrtle street was undermined and fell into the street and floated down in the current. A man named Lilligren, a blacksmith, who happened to be in the building, was carried down inside the building. His cries for assistance attracted a crowd, but no assistance could be extended to him. After going two blocks the structure went to pieces, releasing the poor fellow, but his condition was not in the least improved, as he was swept on down the roaring current, and was not rescued until he had floated almost to Lake St. Croix.

There he was caught just as he was about to make the plunge into the lake. He was conveyed back to his residence, where it was found that one leg was broken in several places and he had received other injuries.

A building on Third street, used as a notion store, was undermined and went toppling down the hillside, a distance of 50 feet. The building was smashed and the goods, valued at $600, buried in the sand.

Suits Settled.

The suits against H. C. Akeley Lumber Company and The Itasca Lumber Company, were settled by the attorneys, Harris Richardson for the state, and James A. Kellogg for the companies.

The state asked that the permit to the H. C. Akeley Lumber Company be cancelled, and that the Itasca pay $75,000 for the lumber taken by it. The Akeley Company was willing to cancel the permit, claiming that the prices agreed therein were more than the lumber is worth at the present time, and the Itasca was willing to pay for the timber actually taken, but claimed that the amount demanded by the state was unreasonable and excessive. The Itasca Company has never paid for any timber, owing to the controversy over the amount. By the agreement the permit is cancelled and the Akeley Lumber Company relieved from the performance of its contract, while the Itasca company pays the state $20,000 in full for all timber taken.

The Itasca had cut timber under the permit to the Akeley Company, but the latter had never cut any timber.

Fish.

S. S. Watkins, superintendent of the state fish hatchery, went to Fond du Lac, Wis., for the purpose of getting 10,000,000 wall-eyed pike spawn for incubation at the St. Paul hatchery. About 40,000,000 pike are already in the hatchery and fully a third of them have hatched out. As fast as the eggs hatch the young fish have to be removed, owing to the canibalistic tendencies. The young pike eat each other so rapidly that the bottom of the jars in which they are hatched quickly become covered with eyes and tails, the only portion of his brothers which the pike will not devour. The trout at the hatchery to the number of 5,000,000 are already hatched and will soon be ready for distribution.

Homes for Homeless.

Upwards of 1,000,000 acres of the ceded Red Lake Indian reservation lands have been surveyed and appraised and are now ready for the market at such time as the secretary of the interior shall decide. Five hundred thousand acres of these lands comprise some of the choicest agricultural and meadow lands to be found in the Northwest, being well watered and timbered. The agricultural portion of these lands, when put on the market will be subject to homestead entry only, and will afford homes to over 5,000 settlers.

Reducted Rates.

A rate of a fare and a third is authorized on account of the annual meeting, Minnesota conference, Seventh Day Adventists, Minneapolis, May 29 to June 12, Minnesoto and North Dakota points; annual encampment, Minnesota division, Sons of Veterns, Monticello, Minn., June 13 to 15, Minnesoto points; Norwegion Lutheran annual Saengerfest, Duluth, June 26 to 28, points in Minnesota, Wisconsin, northern peninsula of Michigan, Iowa and South and North Dakota east of the Missouri river.

Republican Convention.

The republican state central committee met at St. Paul the 10th and decided that the republican state convention should be held at the auditorium in St. Paul, Wednesday, July 11. O. D. Hutchinson, of Hutchinson, was elected a place on the state central committee in the place of Maj. H. B. Strait, of Scott county, deceased. The convention will consist of 1,003 delegates.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Would You Like to "Shake" Malaria,

In the sense of getting rid of it, instead of having it shake you? Of course you would. Then use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters and give it the grand and final "shake." This standard medicine eradicates it root and branch, and fortifies the system against it. Most effectual, too, is the Bitters in cases of dyspepsia, biliousness, constipation, nervousness, rheumatic and kidney complaints.

"WHAT kind of cake did you say that was, Maria?" asked Mr. Shingiss. "That's pound cake, Joe." "Oh, it's certainly heavier than that."

Don't Blame the Cook

If a baking powder is not uniform in strength, so that the same quantity will always do the same work, no one can know how to use it, and uniformly good, light food cannot be produced with it.

All baking powders except Royal, because improperly compounded and made from inferior materials, lose their strength quickly when the can is opened for use. At subsequent bakings there will be noticed a falling off in strength. The food is heavy, and the flour, eggs and butter wasted.

It is always the case that the consumer suffers in pocket, if not in health, by accepting any substitute for the Royal Baking Powder. The Royal is the embodiment of all the excellence that it is possible to attain in an absolutely pure powder. It is always strictly reliable. It is not only more economical because of its greater strength, but will retain its full leavening power, which no other powder will, until used, and make more wholesome food.

DELANO DIARY

BUFFALO GAZETTE $1.00 per year.

—Village Council meeting next Monday night.

--Last Saturday's monthly fair was well attended.

—A dwelling house and garden spot on S. Third street for rent. Apply to Mrs. M. A. Chance.

—Jesse Brandon is building a feather renovator. He will probably feather his nest when he gets it going.

--Children have gathered dandelions all spring for greens, and still our park looks as if there is none gone.

—Call on Ed Greff, the Watertown harness maker, for Conzet's Balm of Gilead Salve, and get a healer. adv.

--The K. of P. lodge met in their new hall on Monday evening. Quite a number of brethren from abroad were present.

—The Wright County Bank is receiving a spring cleaning. It will also be painted and papered by the firm of Borrill & Sleight.

—On Tuesday afternoon a severe rainstorm passed over this place. It is claimed that rye was considerably injured by the hail.

—Pails and baskets full of mushrooms are marketed on our streets daily. Many little fellows accumulate quite a sum by their sale.

- Our school board postponed the hiring of teachers until next Monday, and in consequence will, most likely, have to look elsewhere than to the present corps for a portion of the force for next years service.

—Regular service in the M. E. Church next Sunday morning at 11 o'clock sharp. In the evening there will be a Juniors League Concert. The collection in the evening will go to buy Junior League badges.

--Swedeback & Erickson are having their building on Bridge Street, brick veneered; this will add much to the appearance of that part of town, and make some one a good business place. A. Rewaldt is the mason in the matter.

—Our old ginseng buyer S. S. Ball, informs us that the root is comming into market earlier and more freely than for years. 40cts per pound is being paid. It seems as if the big woods folks are to be helped over the hard times in the same manner they were in '57, to a certain extent.

—Mrs. Shaw received a letter recently from Mrs. Young, of Ashland, Wis., stating that an epidemic of typhoid fever was prevailing there; and expressed a hope that Delano would not be so foolish as to put in a system of waterworks that would bring about such a state of affairs as that existing there.

--G. W. Sublett, a civil engineer from Minneapolis, spent Tuesday looking over our village with a view to drawing plans and specifications for our new water works and electric light plant. It has about been decided to have a good well in some proper locality for procuring good water. It can be stoned up and kept in good order. That's correct; let the good work go on.

—An old Band Member and Tax Payer has a letter in this issue of the GAZETTE, advocating the hiring of the band, by the village, for public concerts, etc. The band is a nice thing in town, and our people appreciate ours. But in case our council can't see their way clear, in these days of water works and electric lights to furnish sweet strains of music on the gentle zephyrs we would be sorry to think our band that has withstood so much adversity would now, so easily lapse into innocuous disuetude. It is the opinion of the majority of Delanoites that they are made of sterner stuff; and amply able to toot their own horns.

—Subscribe for the GAZETTE.

—The bridge is receiving some much needed attention from the street commissioner this week.

--Mat Fautsch has purchased August Berneck's building and saloon; and will probably soon move in.

—Prof. Bohn lost several fine hens from his flock the other night. Poor business, boys, poor business.

—Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Cooper through the instrumentality of attorney M.A. O'Hair adjusted some of their differences this week.

--Malcomb Anderson fell and crippled himself up last night while on the way home. He spent the rainy night at Mr. Skooksberg's.

--Theodore Strauch is completing an addition to his residence on the Montrose road. It will will when done be one of the finest in that vicinity.

—If the city authorities would furnish police protection at the city hall when they rent it, it would obviate the necessity of renters serving in the capacity of policemen. This should be done.

—As the number of saloons seems to be reduced, the Village Council is cogitating the question of raising the license, so as to keep up the revenues. Since the experience of some Minneapolis bondsmen, it will be still more difficult for saloon keepers who do not try to, nor intend to keep their contract to obtain bondsmen.

—Another old drunkard has been added to the list of those to whom saloon keepers are forbidden to sell and still they all get drunk often. It look as if this will continve untill some revolting crime throws the commuuity ihto a fever of excitement against the continual breaking of the law before it will be stopped.

Personals.

C. E. Oakley, of Buffalo, was in town one day this week.

Miss Mamie Hayes is visiting her mother, at Watertown where she resides.

F. G. Nott, and M. Woolley of Howard Lake, were Delano visitors this week.

Eb Brandon and wife, of Independence, attended church in Delano, on Sunday.

Mrs. John Bradford, of Maple Plain, came up Tuesday, for a visit at C. W. Ingerson's.

George Rogers, wife and daughter Frankie, of St. Paul visited Delano friends this week.

A. E. Powell, and Miss Viola Cunningham attended services at Watertown, on Sunday.

Frank Brasie, of Monticello, visited the old homestead here, and the girl he left behind him, on Sunday.

Misses Irene Cheeley and Maud Sherry went east Friday evening; but were back in time for school Monday morning.

Dr. Balcome, now of Macalaster, shook hands with several Delano friends, at the depot, on Tuesday, while the train stopped.

Rev. Guillot, of Waverly, and several other neighboring priests were in attendance at the Catholic school entertainment this week.

Sam. Cutter, of Buffalo and Henry C. Parslow, of Enderlin, N. Dak., took part in the K. P. lodge, at the new hall, Monday evening.

F. L. Halgren, mail agent on the G. N., made Watertown friends a visit this week. He expects to have a night run through to Neche, hereafter.

Dr. George C. Barton, of Minneapolis, was called in consultation on Mr. Parslow's case here last week. On Monday, this week he was called to Buffalo.

Johnston Mealey, of Howard patronized our town pump on Monday. He acts as if he was glued to that old sulkey. Perhaps he will, eventually, overcome his innate bashfulness sufficiently to permit him to look to the right or to the left as he journies through town.

Two pedestrians resembling some of the newspaper pictures of Coxeyites tarried for a short time beside the Delano town pump on Friday; and in the absence of a tin cup, which might have served the purpose, one of them removed a stiff cady from his head and pumping it partially full quietly seated himself and proceeded to quaff the beverage with as much relish as if he had been drinking from a silver mug. His partner, after a futile attemp to use his hat, a large white soft one, accepted the hospitality of his chum and used his improvised vehicle for conveying the cooling drink to his apparently parched lips. If they were bound for Washington, they will, no donbt reach there; as they evidently understand adapting surrounding circumstances to their wants.

THE DELANO BAND.

TO THE HONERABLE VILLAGE COUNCIL AND CITIZENS of DELANO:

It seems very strange that we must loose the only life and prosperity we have in our little village for the small sum of $100 or less, which left for our council to decide as the citizens have already decided what is best. In the first place they have elected a council whom they expect to ask for our benefit, the second place have signed a petition asking the council to hire the band for the comming season for a term of open air concerts once each week which would add more to the life of our little village than anything we could get. This is not all but it is impossible to keep the band together without some help of the citizens who receive all the benefit of that hard work therein. In it the writer has been there and knows what he is talking about. We all know that if our band ceases, or was not in existence how freely we would all say we would give two or three hundred dollars to have such band in town. Just think of it is it not true when they only ask one third of what you would give if you could not get it. Just stop and think, what on? A loss it will be. What will all our waterworks and electric lights amount to without a band? I voted for the same and would again but I rather sit in the dark and hear the sweet tones of a fine band than to sit down with fine lights wishing our band would play in the stand. You have the band stand also; have paid $ 100 to get the band where it is and now you would get the benefit of what you have paid, you may think the band will exist without that appropriation but you are mistaken; it cannot live without help. I am not a member of the band; but have been.

Yours Truly,
Old band member and Tax Payer.

School Notes.

VERNON WILDER, Editor,
E. CUNNINGHAM, Assis't.

The Senate did not meet last Friday as there was no business of importance on hand.

A programme has been prepared and the Pickwick club will meet again Friday.

The botany class spent part of Tuesday afternoon gathering specimens for their herbariums.

Otto Marr is again coming to school after quite a lengthy vacation.

If you see a certain student in the High School roaming around in the alleys and searching among the rubbish, do not think he has lost his senses, he is only looking for a chicken bone with which to perform an experiment.

Professor to Caesar class:—"The founditores in Caesars army used the same weapon as David did when he killed Goliath. What was that?

First Pupil:—"A bow and arrow."

Professor:—"Next."

Second Pupil:—"A slingshot."

It would greatly encourage the scholars if their parents would take enough interest in the school work to visit the school occasionally. As it is now, a visitor is a rara avis.

Thursday and Friday were examination days in the High School department.

The paucity of the notes this week is due to the refusal of the assistant editor to do all the work.

The members of the chemistry class have received appointments in connection with the keeping the laboratory in order, Miss Grace O' Hair, Miss Stella Davis and ye editor, keep the chemicals, apparatus, etc., in order, Edward Freeman is bottle-washer, the assistant editor acts as water carrier, with George Kurtz as assistant, while Roy Wilder is floor manager,

One of the history class in answer to the question, "What Indian war followed the French and Indian war?" replied, "The Revolution."

The Pickwick club met last Friday night with Mrs. Dewey. It was decieed to continue the meetings until the close of the term. A very interesting programme consisting of solections from "Tom Sawyer, Sketch Book, and Innocence Abroad" was given.

County Cullings.

The Journal says Commissioner Roscoe was drunk Commissioner; Flannigan says he wasn't. Who is the best authority?

The Evening Journal thinks a wise plan for getting better Legislature material into the field would be to hold the Legislative Convention at the time State Delegates are elected and not at the County Convention, where more or less trading is indulged in. So far as our County is concerned, if they are chosen at the time appointed, and not at some time to which the convention manipulatiors may see fit to adjourn, it would give better satisfaction.

Superintendent Lindsley expects, we understand, to have Prof. George C. Barton, of the Minneapolis Medical College, at the Summer School, at Buffalo, for a course of lectures on Physiology. That is a good idea, and the Professor will do the subject justice. If the Crow River Medical Society would have a session at Buffalo during the Professor's presence they would enjoy the treat, also; as they recalled to mind their College days, and possibly got a few pointers. Let the M. D's speak up in time to take advantage of this opportunity.

To whateyer party you belong, be a man among men. Do your duty as an American citizen. Attend the caucus of your party, and do your best to send the very best material in your precinct as delegates to the county conventions, send none but men you can rely on to do their duty; men who will aid in electing none but representative, honest, sober men to go as delegates to our state Congressional, and Legislative conventions and aid in making the best possible ticket. After your party has failed notwithstanding your strenious efforts to place good reliable men on the ticket is time enough for you to select from other tickets candidates you prefer. But don't stay at home; neglect your duty as a voter, and keep away from the caucus and then come around saying if our party had nominated better men we would have supported them; but get out and help what you can. Sometimes one or two majority in a caucus controls the delegates, and often one delegation at a county or other convention has the say as to who shall be our nominees. Do your duty from the start, up, if you don't wish such dilly dallying as we now have in Congress, all along the line.

In the cool, soft mud. Quack, quack!"

"I," cried the dandelion, "I!
My roots are thirsty, my buds are dry,"
And she lifted her little yellow head
Out of her green grassy bed.

"I hope 'twill pour!" I hope 'twill pour!"
Croaked the tree toad at his gray back door.
"For with a broad leaf for a roof,
I am perfectly waterproof."

Sang the brook: "I laugh at every drop,
And wish they never need to stop
Till a big river I grow to be,
And could find my way to the sea."

The Brainerd Journal has, in a recent issue a lengthy article on "A pulp and paper mill" which it is hoped to have, soon in Brainerd. Where spruce and popple timber can be had they are considered paying institutions.

From the Cokato Commoner we learn that a jolification meeting of citizens was held there Wednesday evening, a big bonfire, music by the band, speaking, etc., were indulged in. Sexton is said to have termed the late settlement of the G. N. strike as "the Gettysburg of the laboring men." W. E. Mason and J. F. Collins were speakers at the meeting.

The climax of absurdity in paternal government has been reached in a bill introduced into the New York legislature. The bill in question provides for the licensing of bill posters and for the wearing of a badge by them. This would not do so much harm if the proposed law did not go futher and prohibit anybody else from sticking up a bill. If a farmer had a sale of live stock and wanted to announce it to his neighbors, he would not be allowed under such a law as this even to paste his bill upon his own gate. He would have to get the licensed bill poster to do it.—Wright County Times.

COXEY AND BROWN languish in a Washington jail, having been convicted by the police court. They have succeeded in obtaining bed and board for 20 days.

THE ifs, and ands, and buts have been taking turns in preventing the passage of the terrible tariff bill through Congress; but the latest news is that Buttz has fled.

AN organization has been effected in Minneapolis, for the purpose of obliging people to buy their goods of Northwestern manufacturers; we don't believe in the principle.

THE trial by court martial of First Lieutenant, James A. Manly for shooting Capt. Alfred Hedberg is now in progress at Fort Snelling. Lieut. Maney was acquitted by the civil courts, a short time ago and if his lawyers can make a point of this fact may succeed in clearing him before the military court.

DEMOCRATS are growing tired of the dilly dallying with the tariff bill, in Congress, and will be carefnl to return to that honerable body this fall men only whose record is good on this important political question. If the Senate contained men enough of the Roger, Q. Mills, and Knute Nelson stripe to make a majority, our raw materials would probably have been on the free list, the financial skies would have cleared, and Coxey and Brown would have been at large. Of course Sage Donnelly might have lost some of his sayor, in this event but that would not injure the mess much.

DONNELY don't want fusion with the democrats if Owens is to run for Governor and a democrat for State Senator. Neither do we. We don't believe he would object if I. Donnelly was put on in either place. But we would. When a party has no principles of its own, and it's only object in life is to down somebody else it had best announce to the public that it has renounced party althogether and, bushwhacker like will continue to fight from every possible covering with the sole object of demolishing the enemy and handing the country over to a howling mob, regardless of consequences. None of this is ours.

Party Principle.

Men are obliged to stand considerable abuse for sticking up for party. When a vote on some question is had in Congress, or the Legislature. We hear that the party whip was cracked and the faithful bowed to the command of their bosses and voted on strictly party lines. We don't think this criticism is always just. A man who believes in custom principles of protection is apt to carry his ideas all the way down through the various business relations of life. A man who believes in free trade will be a free trader every time opportunity presents. One who favors the license system is in for getting all the protection, and all the money he can out of licensing all kinds of business, and those opposed, don't believe in the system because their principles want permit them to believe in it.

When a man is found voting with another party than the one with which he affiliates; whose principles are opposed to the principles of the party to which he belongs, it is pretty safe to expect that some greater weight has been brought to bear than his feeble mind can resist; that he has surrendered his principles for paltry pelf; that his pocket book has actually been fattened; or that he will receive an appointment or other recompense for his change of vote.

There are times in the lives of some when they seem to change their views on political matters and occasionally one may be brought to think entirely different concerning certain matters; but when he does, he acts so all along the line if his conversion is sound. When a strong party man from principle changes to a fusionist look out for him, he is apt to fuse when elected, to his own advantage.

Hard Times.

In these periods of business depression what is more natural than for us to endeavour to find out some cause for it. The trouble is that genual public only feeling the effects of the stringency of money matters from which they in many instances absolutely are suffering want are ready to accept what may be suggested to them as the cause whether or not in reason there is any foundation for such suggestion.

The republican party have said to the public that the hard times are all due to the coming into power of the democratic party, not for any thing they haye done, but from a fear of what they may do with the tariff. Hugh McCulloch who was a republican and who was Secretary of the Treasury under several republican administrations in his work on men and measures of half a century, says, that all previous financial crisis were not due to changes in the tariff but were due to financial changes and wild speculations. He says "Financial crisis of 1837 was not relieved by the election of Harrison, in fact it did not reach its acme until 1842. Financial crisis largely due to the hostility of president Jackson to the United States banks. The establishing of banks under state laws and wild speculations. In 1836 the government refused to receive any thing but gold and silver for public dues. Crisis of 1857 due to the failure of the Ohio Life and Trust Co. which was due to the speculations of the New York Branch as well as a general distrust of the people." Such is the opinion of a man, who, perhaps, has had no superior in this country in the advantages he has had, to study the financial questions of this country. Now what are the probable causes of the present crisis. The democratic party went out of power in 1888 with a Treasury overflowing, notwithstanding the fact that Gov. McKinley says at that time the democrats could not do any thing on account of the senate being republican; but they did enough so that the cry was what will we do with the surplus. Four years of republican rule passed and the democrats take the reins of government with a treasury almost bankrupt. Did this, we may ask, have any thing to do with hard times? The republicans passed an act, called the Sherman act, requiring the government to purchase a certain amount of silver every month and store it away in the vaults of the Treasury making a drain upon the treasury. Did this have anything to do with hard times? O no, say the republicans; it is all due to the fear the people have that the democrats will reduce the tariff. Let us look into this a little. If such a fear is true, then where must it originate. Not with the working people; but with the manufacturers; and if the poor working people are the ones that a tariff is to benefit then they should be the ones to originate the fear. What did the silver mine owners do when they wanted to compel Congress to pass a free coinage bill, shut down their mines and turn their employees out upon the country to starve? Was it necessary for them to close their mines? O no, they are worth their millions. But what could be a stronger plea to Congress to do what these millionairs desired than the cry of the starving miners? Had they had the love for the workingman they so much prate about they would have continued their works even at a slight loss to themselves. The rich manufacturers of this country are doing the same thing to compell Congress not to reduce the tariff. Is it because they love the working man, no, it is their greed for gain. Every manufacturer does just as Congressman Johnson says he does; hires men just as cheap as he can that can do the work. He says he could make steel rails under absolute free trade and do just the same. Then if Johnson can do it all of them can. And if they all can, it can't be the poor workingman they pity; they only think of their own selfish interests. The Republican party point with great pride to the prosperity of this country under the high tariff republican rule. It is prosperous in a way; but lets see in what way, and if it be a safe, prosperity 20,000,000 acres of American soil are now owned by foreigners; you can hardly grasp an idea of the magnitude of this except by comparison. This comprises an area almost as large as the eight states, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Deleware and Maryland combined, Lord Scully owns 75,000 acres of this land alone, and manages to take about $200,000 annually out of the United States. When the democratic party talks of reducing the tariff the cry of the republicans is that they are working in to the hands of the English; but it is all right for the English Lords to come over here and start a system of Irish landlordism. Is this a good kind of prosperity? English syndicates own nine billions of dollars of mortgages on agricultural lands in this country with an average interest rate of seven per cent interest, amounting to $540,000,000 per annum, that agricultural lands pay to England the high protective tariff of the republican party prevents you farmers from selling your wheat to England and getting any of this money back. Has this any thing to do, we may ask, with our present hard times? We pay $500,000,000 in interest on the watered stock and bonds of railroads, and $5,000 and national taxation, and, as agriculture pays 80 per cent of this, is it any wonder farmers times are hard? The government has given 47,000,000 acres of land to one corporation the Northern Pacific R. R. but this is not all. The land commissioner says that the records of the general land commissioner says that the records of the general land office show that we have given 400,000,000 acres of our land to corporations can you realize the magnitude of such a tract of land? Take Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut and to these six states add New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Deleware, Maryland, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, fourteen of the greatest states of America and you only have 205,000,000 acres a little over half what has been given to rail road corporations. With what reckless generosity have we taken from the poor to give to the rich; and what is the consequence. In the United States 70 persons are worth $700,000,000 and less than 50 of these can control the currency and commerce of the entire country. If these 50 desire any thing of Congress they make their demands, and either by buying up Congressman enough to make their point, or bringing such a pressure to bear by upsetting the natural trend of commerce as to compel Congress to accede to their demands. In New York city 10,000 persons out of a population of 2,000,000 inhabitants own nearly the whole city and only 13,000 own any real estate at all. Chicago with a population of about 1,500,000 has her real estate owned by less than 3 per cent of her people. Are there any lessons to be learned from this state of affairs? Does this demonstrate that our country is prosperous? Yes but it is a dangerous prosperity for free institutions and a rapid stride toward the tenant system of Europe. Does this demonstrate the great love that is claimed for the laboring man? No, under the pretext of high wages for the laborer the republican party has kept up the most wonderful tariff system we heard of.

There is only one class it is certain to help and that is the manufacturing class. It gives the rich manufactures a chance to charge more for his wares and to form trusts and monopolies by which he can compel the consumer to pay whatever he desires for what he manufacturers. It leaves the matter of wages in his hands. He can hire help just as cheaply as he desires, or can get it for, to do the work, their is nothing to prevent that, it is then to the manufactures alone that a tariff is of any certain benefit. The laborer and consumer are at his mercy. And does not the few facts and figures we have given show that he uses it to his advantage. AJAX.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 18, 1894.

The public received its first knowledge this week that in additional to other more or less disreputab methods of defeating tariff legislation attempts had been made to bribe Senators to vote against the tariff bill, but the democratic managers of the tariff bill have known for sometime that an attempt had been made by a lobbyist named Buttz once a carpet-bag republican memberof the House from South Carolina, to bribe Senators Hunton, of Virginia, and Kyle, of South Dakota, to vote against the bill. Buttz claimed to represent a wealthy syndiate which was prepared to spend $1,000,000 to defeat the tariff bill. He went to the home of Senator Hunton and told a son of that gentleman that his father could have $25,000 if he would agree to vote against the bill. Senator Hunton at once informed half a dozen democratic Senators. Buttz had the audacity to broach the subject to Mr. Kyle in person. That gentleman refered him to his private secretary, after instructing that functionary to have a witness to their conversation, and in the presence of a witness Butiz offered to give Mr. Kyle $14,000 to vote against the bill. Mr. Kyle at once placed these facts in the hands of the democratic senators and expressed his willingness to aid in bringing this would-be briber to justice. It has not yet been decided what, if any, actionwill be taken by the Senate, but there is little doubt that these attempts will hasten the passage of the tariff bill.

Secretary Hoke Smith has added to his popularity with Georgians by the help he has given the delegation from Atlanta, here this week to work up Congressional interest in the International Exposition to be held at Atlanta in the fall of 1895. They do not want a government appropriation for the expotion, but only ask that Congress recognize it to the extent of authorizing a government exhibit in a building to be erected by the government. This recognition is necessary if foreign governments are to be represented at the exhibation. Speaker Crisp and the entire Georgian deligation in Congress are working like beavers to secure what is wanted and the Speaker before going home to attend his mother-in-law's funeral, placed his room at the capatal at the disposol of the visitors and it is being used as their headquaters.

It is now easy to understand why this government took such strong grounds in favor of the government of Brazil and against the insurgents, although it was only this week that it became so. From information that has leaked out through gossip in diplomatic circles there is little doubt that that the stand taken and maintained by president Cleveland during the Brazilian contest was the only thing prevented the carrying out of the plot instigated and backed by the government of Great Britain, for the overthrow of the Brazilian republic and the setting up of a monarchy that would have been dominated by Great Britain. President Cleveland and Secretary Gresham were conversant with the plot from it's begining and were determined to thwart it. The failure of that plot is believed to have been at the bottom of the dilatoriness of the British Government in making arrangements to cary out the Bering Sea arbitration. The Britishers were mad at Uncle Sam for spoiling their little grab game.

Representative Hatch, of Missouri, is no longer a young man, having passed his sixtieth milestone last Septemer, but his courage is just as young as it ever was, and when accused by Represenative Hopkins, of Illnois, of trying to jinggle an increase of salery for a friend into the Agricultural approprition bill, which is in his charge, he said, shaking his fist signficantly at Hopkins: "If the gentleman from Illnois means that word in its ordinary English sigificance, I want to tell him that if he should use it to me outside of this chamber I would ram it down his throat."

Retrenchment in gouernment expenditures has been the watchword of the democrats who have made the regular appropation bills for this Congress, and the Legislative, Eveutive and Judicial appropapation bill, completed by the committee an appropritians this week, shows how well they have have worked up to the watchword.

This is the bill that carries saleries of all officials, and 558 fewer of them are provided for than were in the bill for the current fiscal year. It also carries $766,199 less than this year's appropration, a very substantial reduction when every thing is taken into consideration.

"Distance lends enchantment to the view." Since Coxey moved his tramps out to Blandensburg, Md., Washington has lost all interest in them, but a car-load offlour and some cash has this week come to them from Missouri and Colorado, showing that there are people who have not yet seen them as they are.

Binding Twine.

Henry Wolfer, warden of the penitentiary, at Stillwater has sent out a lot of samples of the prison made binding twine. The twine is of hemp, grown in Minnesota, Iowa and Kentucky, mostly. Mr. Wolfer says:

"This twine will be sold the present season at a price not to exceed 7 cents per pound, and lower, if necessary, to meet competition of any twine of any length and quality that may be placed on the market, said price to be finally determined by the Board of Managers June 1, 1894. All the purchasers of twine previous to that date will be entitled to the benefit of any reductions below seven cents that may be made by the Board. There need, therefor, be no hesitancy in placing orders now, as the prices will be adjusted as above indicated." WASHINGTON, May 21.—Coxey, Browne, and Jones were sentenced by Judge Miller in the Washington police court this afternoon to 20 days in jail for violating the statute of the United States prohibiting the display of partisan banners in the capitol grounds, and Coxey and Browne were fined $5 each additional for trespassing on the grass, the alternative being another 10 days in jail. Jones was acquitted on this last charge.

At five minutes of 2 o'clock Coxey, Browne and Jones, with handcuffs on their wrists, were placed in the black maria with a dozen white and negro workhouse prisoners, who were not handcuffed, as companions, and the van immediately conveyed them to the jail. Coxey did not relish free transportation on such a basis, and when he was told that he was to be taken to the district prison he asked to be allowed to go in a carriage, but his request was not granted, and he and his companions were compelled to ride the same as other prisoners. A score of police patrolled the sidewalks adjacent to the court house after the sentence was given and compelled the curious from assembling thereabouts.

Beware of Fruit Skins.

With regard to the eating of fruit an important caution must be given: Fruit skins carry germs and are no more intended for human sustenance than potato skins, melon rinds, or pea pods. The bloom of the peach is a luxuriant growth of microbes, that of the grape only less so; and when these are taken into the stomach they find most favorable conditions for their lively and rapid development, which causes the decay of the fruit before it is possible to digest it. This is the reason that many persons think they cannot eat raw fruit. If they would in all cases discard the skin they could derive only good from the fruit itself. Nature provides the skin for the protection of the fruit from the multitude of germs which are ever ready to attack it, as is evidenced when the skin is bruised or broken in any way. The microbes at once begin their work of decay, and the fruit is unfit for food. Children are chief offenders in respect to this rule, and should be carefully watched and frequently cautioned. A daintiness as to the condition of fruit should also be cultivated, to prevent its being eaten unripe, or too old, on the verge of decay. Remember that it is sweet and ripe fruit, in prime condition only, that is recommended.—From "Sanitarian;" Demorest's Magazine for June.

IN Newburg, N. Y., the women for the first time voted in a taxpayers' election and defeated a proposition to issue $50,000 in bonds for a new courthouse. This event leads a naughty Gotham newspaper to remark: "How different it would have been if on the eve of the election the bond advocates had advertised: 'Great reduction! Saturday is bargain day! Marked down to $49,999.98! Last opportunity for a new courthouse at that price!' Not a woman would have stayed away from the polls or voted against the bonds. They would have walked five miles, if necessary, to get that courthouse for $49,999.98.

AN electric ventilator for supplying a building with fresh air, either cold or warmed, as desired, is so arranged that the electric motor sets the ventilator revolving, which sucks cool air in. When warm air is desired, a current is sent into a network of fine wire possessing a high resistance, and through the network the air is obliged to pass; the current heats the wires and the air becomes heated. The movement of a commutator is sufficient to change the character of the air supplied by the ventilator. This system is capable of considerable adaptation, and it is stated that the hygienic results are good.

TO GOVERN HAWAII.

Some Features of the Proposed New Constitution.

HONOLULU, May 15, via San Francisco, May 23.—The constitutional convention, the members of which were elected on May 3, will meet on May 30. The new constitution will be presented to the convention for its approval. Its main features are as follows:

The new government is to be called the Republic of Hawaii. The executive power will be vested in the president. The executive council will consist of five members instead of four as at present, a minister of health and education being added. The upper house will consist of fifteen senators. The qualification of a senator will be that he shall be 30 years old, shall be able to read and write the English language, shall have resided in the islands three years, shall own propert, of not less than $5,000 in value and shall have an income of $1,200 a year.

The assembly or lower house is to consist of fifteen members, six from the island of Oahu and three each from Hawaii, Maui and Kaui. They will serve for two years only. A member of the assembly must be a citizen of Hawaii or a citizen of any country which has treaty relations with Hawaii, and have resided in the islands for at least a year. He must be able to read and write the English or Hawaiian language, except in case of those who voted in the recent elections to whom this requirement does not apply. Meetings of the legislature are to be held every two years. Each session is to be limited to ninety days and neither house can adjourn more than two days without the consent of the other. The president will have the power of veto, which can be overruled by a two-thirds vote of both houses. It is the present intention to have President Dole reappointed for a term of two years, probably six, after which the offices will be filled by regular elections. It is more likely that the present ministers will be retained for a year, as their appointment rests with the president.

The new constitution can be amended or revised in the ordinary way, but it is expressly stipulated that amendments containing a proposition for the establishment of a monarchical form of government shall not be presented.

The claim is now made that when the republic is declared the natives will make the looked-for uprising. Royalist leaders say they are only restrained by the expressed wish of the ex-queen, who still has great faith in the United States.

KEEPS UP.

Trade Shows Soundness in Spite of Depressing Influences.

NEW YORK, May 21.—R. G Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

"The obstacles to improvement do not lessen. The strikes of coal miners and coke workers have not ceased, but have caused the stoppage of numerous works this week and embarrassment to some railroads. The conference at Cleveland exhibited much angry feeling and wider differences than had been expected and seems to render agreement more distant. Proceedings in the senate do not indicate that the latest form of tariff revision has made speedy final action more probable. Yet the recuperative force of the country is so great that observers are constantly amazed at the volume of business being transacted, the tonnage being transported, the number of works resuming operations, and the general soundness of trade, notwithstanding influences which in any other land would produce dire disaster.

"The soundness of the commercial world is shown in the diminished importance of failures, the liabilities reported for the second week of May amounting to only $1,937,538, of which $1,490,932 were of trading and $432,606 of manufacturing concerns. The failures this week have been 220 in the United States, against 247 last year, and 24 in Canada, against 14 last year."

FOR POOR BORROWERS.

New York Millionaires Establish a Pawnshop.

NEW YORK, May 23.—Cornelius Vanderbilt and thirty other New York millionaires opened their loan office Monday morning at Fourth avenue and Twenty-second street. The organization, which will be known as the Provident Loan society, was authorized by the last legislature, and originated with Rev. David H. Greer, rector of St. Bartholomew's church. The society was formed with the special object of assisting the poor, and money will be loaned on personal property for the full value of the goods pledged at the rate of 1 per cent. a month.

Among the wealthy men interested are Frederick R. Coudert, John D. Crimmins, R. Fulton Cutting, Charles S. Fairchild, ex-Mayor Abram S. Hewitt, Adrian Iselin, Jr., John S. Kennedy, Seth Low, J. Pierpont Morgan, Walter Stanton and J. Kennedy Tod.

DID NO GOOD.

Cleveland Conference of Miners and Operators Accomplishes Nothing.

CLEVELAND, O., May 19.—The conference of coal miners and operators came to an end Thursday, nothing having been accomplished. All offers of compromise were rejected and the miners declared their belief that any agreement that might be reached would avail nothing, as there were so many operators who refused to join in the conference and would not be bound by its action.

President McBride said he was willing to have a vote taken on the compromise offered by the operators, but he would guarantee that the miners would be unanimous against it. He said:

"There can be no compromise along the lines of starvation wages. The miners make no threats, but they stand together, peaceably, earnestly and determined as ever, and will go on so, finishing the present fight and prepared for future fights."

HEAVILY FINED.

Chicago Election Commissioners Punished for Contempt of Court.

CHICAGO, May 18.—To pay a fine of $1,000 and to remain in jail until such fine be paid was the penalty imposed by Judge Chetlain on Election Commissioners P. H. Keenan, A. W. Hutchings and Henry Schomer for refusing to obey the court's order to submit to inspection by the grand jury the ballots cast at the April election in the twenty-second precinct of the Twenty-ninth ward. The proceedings were dismissed as to Chief Clerk W. A Taylor, because it had been shown that he had no authority over the ballots. The respondents were not in court and an order of commitment was at once issued and sent to Sheriff Gilbert, instructing him to arrest the contumacious commissioners and lock them in jail.

Will Stay in the Field.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—Representative W. C. P. Breckinridge was seen about a report that a delegation of prominent Kentuckians intended coming here to urge him to withdraw from the race for congress in favor of his son, Desha. Mr. Breckinridge said: "I have heard the rumor. You can say for me that the old man will be in congress next time. After that the young man may be allowed to take his chance in the race, but for the present I am still in it."

He Can't Complain.

CHICAGO, May 21.—P. D. Armour says the country is in better shape than many persons are disposed to admit and that his firm is doing as much business as last year

FOUND GUILTY.

Dr. Meyer Is Convicted of Poisoning in New York.

NEW YORK, May 19.—The jury in the case of Dr. Henry Meyer, who is accused of having poisoned Ludwig Brandt, came into court and rendered a verdict of murder in the second degree.

The penalty is imprisonment for life. A motion for a new trial was entered. Dr. Meyer was accused of poisoning Brandt in order that he might profit from the latter's life insurance. Brandt had married Dr. Meyer's wife, supposing her a single woman, whereas she was in reality the doctor's confederate. It was expected that she would receive the insurance and then she and the doctor would enjoy it together. It is alleged that the doctor had been guilty of similar crimes before.

POWDERLY BOUNCED.

Knights of Labor Expel the Ex-Master Workman.

PHILADELPHIA, May 21.—Terence V. Powderly, ex-general master workman of the Knights of Labor, A. W. Wright, of Toronto, Can., ex-member of the general executive board of the knights, and P. H. Quinn, master workman of District Assembly, 99, an ardent supporter of Powderly, have been unceremoniously expelled from the Knights of Labor. This action on the part of the new general executive board of the knights has been expected for some time. Their expulsion was the result of an investigation of charges to the effect that Powderly and the others have been trying to disrupt the organization.

TURNED THE TABLES.

A Western Girl Kills Her Lover Who Attempts Her Life.

LEAD, S. D., May 21.—Thomas Johnson, in the jewelry business here, was shot through the heart by a revolver in the hands of Minnie Van Aiken about 10 o'clock Saturday morning. Johnson and the girl had been keeping company for some time, and he was insanely jealous of attentions shown her by others. It is alleged that Johnson insisted on an immediate marriage, and upon her refusal he shot at her, missing his mark. In return she drew a revolver, and her aim was so true that the first bullet killed him.

WON BY THE DEMOCRATS.

Judge Bookwalter Sustains the Illinois Apportionment Act of 1893.

DANVILLE, Ill., May 22.—Judge Ferdinand Bookwalter has rendered his decision in the apportionment suit in favor of the democrats. In a brief opinion he declared that his court cannot question the senatorial apportionment law of 1893, and therefore denies the petition of plaintiff, James P. Fletcher, republican candidate for the legislature, who sought to enjoin Walter C. Tuttle, clerk of Vermilion county, from calling an election under the disputed statute. For want of equity the court dismissed the suit and declared that the costs must be paid by the republican petitioner.

THE BRIBERY INQUIRY.

Witnesses Before the Senate Committee Appointed for Investigation.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—The committee to investigate the charges of bribery in the senate met in secret session on Monday. Senator Hunton and his son were both called before the committee to testify, and both stated that C. W. Buttz was the man who had approached Senator Hunton. Senator Kyle (S. D.) testified that Buttz approached him about two months ago, offering him $14,000 for his vote against the tariff bill. At 3 o'clock Maj. Buttz was called and his attorney was admitted with him.

Iowa Purchasers May Recover Every Dollar That They Pay.

DES MOINES, Ia., May 23.—The supreme court has decided that every dollar paid for liquor that is to be sold contrary to law may be recovered from the person or firm to whom it is paid. That under the law the money is received with that express understanding. A Des Moines dealer recovered about $3,000 in this case from a Peoria brewing firm, besides about the same amount of liquor that he had received and had not paid for. The decision covers bottles, cases, etc., in which the liquor is contained.

SEVEN WERE INJURED.

Boiler Explodes at New York and Crashes Through a Big Building.

IN MEMORIAM.

THE blue-eyed month, the dryad of the year,
May, palpable, half-visible, is here!
She lives, encompassed by her leafy screen,
To peep with laughing eyes, herself unseen.
She lingers in the lanes or ferny wood
Or where the meadows bloom in solitude,
Or listens on the river's sedgy brink
To the glad song of her own bobolink.
Her swift foot pauses where the grasses wave
Above some half-forgotten soldier's grave.
She stoops above war desolated spots
To seal forgiveness with forget-me-nots,
And writes with mosses on the crumbling stone
Heroic names recalled by her alone.

O May, so prodigal in memories!
Hast thou forgot the battles on the seas?
Hast thou forgot the seamen that went down
Without a tear to blanch the cheek of brown?
No violet or primrose ever rests
Its fluted leaves upon these warrior-breasts.
No friendly hand has decked their ocean grave
Nor sorrow's tribute reached them through the wave.
Perchance the drifting seaweed drops a spray
In the unfolded arm, then floats away:
Perchance those crystal corridors below
Are lighted by a faint and shifting glow
Where passing birds, with soft and sheeny wings,
Shed gleams of glory in their wanderings!

Not for their age alone the brave old ships
Set thundering trumpets to their iron lips!
They poured that awful eloquence of fire
To right the wrong, and lift the right still higher.
The ocean or the shipyard claims the wrecks,
And shadowy crews invest the rotting decks.
A ghostly canvas flutters to the breeze.
Hast thou no garlands, May, for such as these?
Bring thy deep urn filled with a nation's tears;
Sing thy sweet psalm sprung from our happier years:
And where a warship moulders on our shore,
Worn like a grandsire whose long work is o'er,
Yet on whose rough cheek baby fingers stray,
Give the grim past the blossoms of to-day!

AUNT DRUSILLA'S MEMORIAL DAY.

"AUNT DRUSILLA," shouted two bright young voices in concert, "teacher says we are to ride in the procession on Decoration day and carry flowers to the soldiers' graves."

Aunt Drusilla looked up from her sewing, gave a scarcely audible sigh and said nothing. Too much excited to notice this apparent lack of interest on the part of her aunt, the elder child continued the fascinating description of the event in which she hoped to play so prominent a part. In a breathless tone, wherein was just a suspicion of an undercurrent of pride, she proceeded eagerly:

"And I am to walk first, teacher says—and we are to wear white dresses with bright sashes—it will be lovely, I"—

"It won't be quite so lovely if we haven't any white dresses to wear," interrupted her little sister Myra, who was of a practical turn of mind. Myrtle's face fell somewhat at this, and a moment or two of thoughtful silence followed. Quickly rallying, however, she turned to her aunt as to a person of inexhaustible resources, saying confidently:

"Aunt Drusilla will fix us some, I know she will."

"No you don't, Myrtle, Aunt Drusilla hasn't said she would."

"You will, won't you, aunt?" said Myrtle, coaxingly.

"You must wait until I think it over, children—you know I am not made of money."

As this was a somewhat common expression with Aunt Drusilla when extra drains were made on her pocketbook, and often resulted favorably, the little girls felt no serious misgivings with reference to their white dresses.

Left once more to herself Drusilla continued her work with thoughts which wandered far from her present surroundings. Time had flown by, carrying with it one by one of her old associates, either on the matrimonial wave, or to the shore where there is "neither marrying nor giving in marriage," and still she, Drusilla Dexter, remained with an uneventful past and an apparently joyless future. I said "uneventful;" in that, perhaps I erred—taking the general opinion of the few who thought they knew Drusilla's history from beginning to end as a criterion for the precise truth.

The wise man has truly said: "Every heart knoweth its own bitterness and a stranger intermeddleth not with its joys," and he might have added—its own secret hopes.

Some fifteen years before the date of my story, while in her father's home, Drusilla cherished, and fell asleep many a night to dream of, an ideal of a manly type. No one suspected it—naturally reserved, she said but little of what touched her in the tenderest spots. Hugh Manning, their neighbor's son, was a big boy when she first started for school. His was the friendly hand upon which she had relied in all her childish troubles, and out of the abundance of a large-hearted nature he never refused to help the shy little maiden whose thanks were often only an appreciative smile. Years passed in this way until Hugh was a man indeed and Drusilla a sweet-faced maiden. The neighborly companionship continued and Drusilla cared for none other. To see him once in a few days, even, satisfied her.

The distant rumblings of war at last penetrated the little western village where they lived, and women's hearts failed them, knowing that the call for their loved ones would surely come. Then Drusilla awoke from the blissful dream in which she had indulged to the reality of a heartache and a startling consciousness of the fact which is either fraught with much joy or sorrow to a woman, viz., that her heart was no longer in her own keeping—irrevocably given to another. The call for men came even sooner than was anticipated, and Hugh was one of the first to offer himself. Notwithstanding her grief Drusilla would not have had it otherwise. Her ideal was a brave man, stalwart and fearless—but oh, the misery of it! Her father and young brother were likewise going; the one on the extreme limit of age permissible, and the other almost too young for service, but they were ready and willing, and the women were too loyal to their country to say them nay.

The last night before the men started, the two families of the Mannings and Dexters met at the latter's house for a farewell supper. Beneath the pleasant flow of genial neighborly chat there lay the deep current of turbulent thought and sad forebodings to which none would give voice lest the others should be disheartened. Drusilla waited on the table with a white face and a compressed look about her mouth, telling of a speechless grief harder to bear because it must not find voice.

It was an evening in June. The roses were in full bloom and filled the air with their sweetness. The scent of roses reminded Drusilla of that evening for many years after. Weary of the strain of keeping up appearances the girl went for a breath of air down the garden path between the rose bushes. A sense of desolation, too undefined for language, lay like a heavy burden on her heart. Hearing a footstep on the walk she hastily turned, dreading the interruption to these few stolen moments of freedom from restraint. A glance at the supposed intruder sufficed to bring the color to her white lips.

"What did you run away for, Drusilla?" said Hugh, cheerily. "Why, you surely are not crying because we go to fight our country's battles and, please God, to return with honor to our friends. You must exercise faith and courage, Drusilla, it is the only way to endure these separations."

"I cannot, Hugh. It is far easier for you to go than for us who remain to stay at home and weep," replied the girl, tearfully.

"How do you know that, Drusilla. I—"

There was no opportunity for further speech, the rest of the family joined them and the conversation became general. The summons came earlier than was expected in the morning and leave-takings were of necessity brief. Faith and courage—those two words burned themselves, as it were, into Drusilla's very soul. Faith first in her God and then in Hugh, and courage to take up boldly the duties of each long sad day, and to wait for the tidings of loved ones that might never come.

Some time after the departure of the men from Leigh Valley a distant relative visited the family and brought for Drusilla, as a present, a beautiful white dress. In an instant the thought occurred to her that it might serve as a wedding dress if Hugh should return and ask her to be his wife.

"He meant to do so that night, I am sure," she frequently said to herself. "Oh, if he had only spoken, it would have been easier to bear now."

Troubles came thickly to the Dexter family after the first year of absence. Occasionally letters from the field told of wounds and suffering, and finally they ceased altogether. From Hugh there were two or three communications to his family, and then he too was silent. At the close of the war the father and brother returned. Careful nursing restored the latter, but no loving care could bring health to the shattered constitution of the former, and in a few months he was laid to rest in a soldier's grave. Hugh's whereabouts was a mystery. He was heard of as wounded and a prisoner, and the opinion of his relatives was that he too had fallen a victim to the horrors of the war.

STEPPED UP TO THE LEADER.

"Faith and courage, oh for it!" prayed Drusilla many times a day; "not my will, but Thine be done," she murmured from the depths of her stricken soul.

Her mother died, and then she went to a distant town to live with her brother, who had married and settled down. As the patient aunt of his little girls, and the mainstay of the church to which she belonged, she did not lead an unhappy life, although an abiding sorrow was her portion. The mystery attending Hugh's fate remained unsolved. Other troubles, however, followed. Her brother and his wife were both taken, and she was left sole guardian to the little girls, Myrtle and Myra.

Hearing of another town in which she could get suitable employment so as to eke out the small income at her disposal, she took the children with her and settled down as a dressmaker. "Faith and courage," oh, how she needed them now; alone with two little ones depending on her.

Day by day, with a steady purpose of doing faithfully the work coming to her, she worked and won victory after victory over discouragement and occasional seeming defeat. These decoration days were seasons requiring more faith and courage that at times she felt she possessed.

The problem of the children's white dresses, on the day on which our story opened, occupied her mind some time after their departure. Money was scarce with her just now, sickness had thrown her behind, and for awhile rigid economy had to be exercised.

"Why not give them your white dress; you will never have it made up for yourself," whispered common sense. Now this white dress was the only tangible thing poor Drusilla felt she had to look at connected with the one romance in her life. As such she prized it, and had kept it wrapped up in blue paper to preserve its color.

"Yes," she said to herself, "it will make them two beautiful dresses, and as soldier children they will decorate the graves."

Myrtle and Myra were in transports of joy over the prospect of their new white dresses. Myrtle was especially jubilant, too much so to notice her aunt's face as she folded the goods and put them away. Myra, however, whom little escaped, observed it, and told Myrtle she was sure something was troubling Aunt Drusilla.

"What can it be?" said Myrtle, coming down at once from her excitement.

"I don't know, Myrtle, but I believe it is about Decoration day. Aunt looked as though she cried last year, I remember."

It rained the day before Decoration day, and many were the fears expressed by the children lest it would be too wet to wear their new white dresses. Myrtle, who resembled her aunt, with fair hair and blue eyes, looked at herself with great satisfaction in the looking glass. The sunshine threw streaks of gold on her hair and a rosy tint on her cheeks.

"Won't you come to the cemetery and see us, aunt?" asked Myra, holding up her face for a good-by kiss.

"No, dear, I think not. You can tell me all about it when you come home. Be good children, and be careful not to spoil your dresses. Good-by!"

"Faith and courage," whispered the lonely woman to herself, when the sound of their footsteps had died away in the distance. "I need them as much as ever. Will it ever cease to be a struggle to keep them up? So far I have had sustaining grace, but how about the long future?"

"As thy day so shall thy strength be," came to her cheerily, and she resumed her sewing with peace, yes, and with a positive joy in her heart.

Meanwhile the children were having a grand time. The weather was perfect, and the arrangements all which could be desired. The G. A. R. men were drawn up in line at the entrance of the cemetery while the children marched past them, Myrtle heading the procession. One of the men started violently on seeing her, and could hardly forbear breaking from the ranks and hastening to overtake her. When the graves were all decorated and the children were marching back to the conveyances at the cemetery gates, the man left his comrades and stepped up to the leader.

In the few minutes intervening between their arrival and taking their seats in the carriages he contrived to ask her if her name was Dexter, or if she had relatives of that name?

"Yes, Myra and I are called Dexter, and so is our aunt, Miss Drusilla. Do you know her?" asked the child, looking curiously at the gray-haired G. A. R.

"Yes, that is, I used to. Where do you live?"

"With Aunt Drusilla, in a small white house with green blinds, on Spencer street. Good-by, sir, I must get in now. Come, Myra."

On the children's arrival at home they found their aunt engaged with a customer, so that there was no chance to tell her of the afternoon's performance for quite a little while. Just as they were about to do so there was a ring at the doorbell, and as their aunt was assisting them to take off their finery neither of them could go to the door.

"I wonder if it's that man?" said Myra. "He has had about time to get here."

The little girls waited in vain for their aunt to come and finish their toilets, so they concluded to wait upon each other, as they usually did, and then go and see what ailed their aunt. This was soon executed, so eager were they to solve the mysterious coming of this stranger. On entering the room they found the G. A. R. man occupying a seat very near their aunt, who appeared to be in too happy a state of mind to warrant that sob. On seeing the children Drusilla held out her hand to Myrtle, who happened to be foremost, saying, with a smile in which there was a mingling of various emotions:

"These are poor Heber's children, Hugh. They are all that is left of my old home."

"This little lady's likeness to you was the means of my finding you, Drusilla, after my long search. I only intended remaining here a week, so that my chances were small of meeting with you."

A few words will suffice to explain Hugh's silence and long absence. He had written to Drusilla, asking her to be his wife, soon after wishing her good-by, but unfortunately the letter was lost. He was injured in the head during one of the first engagements. On his apparent recovery from the wound it was discovered that his memory was a blank, and without being exactly insane, he came very near it. For several years he continued in this condition. Finally, however, he recovered under skillful treatment, and then set on a quest for his loved ones. No one in his native village knew Drusilla's latest move, and the search seemed hopeless.

By the will of his father, who had died recently, he had come into considerable property, and, as he told Drusilla, there would be no further need for her to be a breadwinner.

"I am afraid, Hugh," she answered, with a loving smile, "that with so much happiness in prospect I shall be tempted to forget my daily prayer for faith and courage!"—Mrs. W. L. Sanders, in Chicago Standard.

A MAN WITH A HISTORY.

The Terrible Experience That Befell John W. Thomas, of Theta, Tennessee.

Afflicted with a Peculiar Disease—His Body Covered with Lumps—Could Not Eat and Thought He Was Going to Dry Up—His Recovery the Marvel of Tennessee.

[From the Nashville, Tenn., Banner.]

Mr. John W. Thomas, Jr., of Theta, Tenn., is a man with a most interesting history. At present he is interested in blooded horses for which Maury County is famous.

"Few people, I take it," said Mr. Thomas to a reporter who had asked him for the story of his life, "have passed through as remarkable a chain of events as I have and remained alive to tell the story.

"It was along in 1884, when I was working in the silver mines of New Mexico, that my troubles began; at first I suffered with indigestion, and so acute did the pains become that I went to California for my health, but the trip did me little good, and fully impressed with the idea that my last day had nearly dawned upon me, I hurried back here to my old home to die.

"From simple indigestion my malady developed into a chronic inability to take any substantial food, I was barely able to creep about, and at times I was prostrated by spells of heart palpitation. This condition continued until one year ago.

"On the 11th of April, 1893, I suddenly collapsed, and for days I was unconscious, in fact I was not fully myself until July. My condition on September 1st, was simply horrible, I weighed but seventy pounds, whereas my normal weight is 165 pounds. All over my body there were lumps from the size of a grape to the size of a walnut, my fingers were cramped so that I could not more than half straighten them. I had entirely lost control of my lower limbs and my hand trembled so that I could not drink without spilling the liquid. Nothing would remain on my stomach, and it seemed that I must dry up before many more days had passed.

"I made another round of the physicians, calling in one after the other, and by the aid of morphine and other medicines they gave me, I managed to live though barely through the fall."

Here Mr. Thomas displayed his arms, and just above the elbow of each there was a large irregular stain as large as the palm of the hand and of a purple color, the space covered by the mark was sunken nearly to the bone. "That," said Mr. Thomas, "is what the doctors did by putting morphine into me.

"On the 11th of December, 1893, just eight months after I took permanently to bed—I shall never forget the date—my cousin, Joe Foster, of Carters' Creek, called on me and gave me a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, saying they had cured him of partial paralysis, with which I knew he had all but died. I followed his directions and began taking the medicine, as a result I stand before you to-day the most surprised man on earth. Look at my hand, it is as steady as yours; my face has a healthy look about it; I have been attending to my duties for a month. Since I began taking the pills I have gained 30 pounds, and I am still gaining. All the knots have disappeared from my body except this little kernel here in my palm. I have a good appetite and I am almost as strong as I ever was.

"Yesterday I rode thirty-seven miles on horseback. I feel tired to-day but not sick. I used to have from two to four spells of heart palpitation every night, since I began the use of the pills I have had but four spells altogether.

"I know positively that I was cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I believe firmly that it is the most wonderful remedy in existence to-day, and every fact I have presented to you is known to my neighbors as well as to myself, and they will certify to the truth of my remarkable cure."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are not a patent medicine in the sense that name implies. They were first compounded as a prescription and used as such in general practice by an eminent physician. So great was their efficacy that it was deemed wise to place them within the reach of all. They are now manufactured by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., and are sold in boxes (never in loose form by the dozen or hundred, and the public are cautioned against numerous imitations sold in this shape) at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company.

TIGHT CLOTHING.

The Many Evil Effects Resulting from This Cause.

The more loosely clothing fits the less it conducts heat, because a layer of air is interposed between it and the body—and air is an exceedingly bad conductor of heat. This protecting layer of air enables the body in winter to keep its normal temperature the more easily, because the heat given off at the surface of the body passes slowly through it; whereas if the clothing fit too closely to the skin heat is dissipated with much greater rapidity. In summer time, on the other hand, the air in which we move is not so warm as the objects upon which the sun's rays fall directly, and so the surface of clothes may become much hotter than the air surrounding them. The advantage of the layer of the air is obvious also in this case. Therefore we see that in hot and in cold weather, too, tightly-fitting clothing defeats the first and great object of wearing clothes, and tends to exhaust the bodily strength and make it unfit for work.

Again, the clothing must be so constructed as not to interfere with the freedom of the movement of any part of the body; otherwise the due performance of some function is interfered with, so that injury results. A small foot may be a desirable possession, but it is useless to attempt to obtain it by the compression of the foot by too small a pair of boots. Freedom of movement is at once impaired, and graceful, easy walking is a sheer impossibility. The victim of tight boots is self revealed by the ungainly gait—a much more conspicuous infirmity than a large foot. In addition to the discomfort necessarily experienced, permanent injury may be caused to the structures of the foot. Deformity of the toe results, and one particular deformity, known as "hammer toe," is often thus produced, the pressure of the boot causing the toes to override one another. The great toe becomes turned outwards, the ball becomes unduly prominent, and walking becomes difficult. A commoner result of a tight shoe is the formation of corns. Whenever any part of the body is subjected to intermittent pressure, thickening of the tissues occurs at that spot and a corn is the result, which is capable of causing extreme pain, especially if slightly inflamed. The ill effects of tight shoes are sometimes increased by having the heel (which is generally much too high) placed almost under the middle of the foot, and the climax of absurdity is reached by making the front of the shoe point sharply. By this type of shoe ingrowing toe nail—a most painful condition—is often produced.

The corset is also very frequently worn too tight. As a means of support the corset is doubtless of use, but worn too tightly it presses down the diaphragm and it interferes with the organs of digestion and circulation. It is notorious how frequently very tightly-laced ladies suffer from chronic indigestion. How often do they faint in church and other places where the heat may be excessive! Nor is the effect of tight clothing confined to such complaints. The bones and organs suffer from this influence, and after death they are found to be deeply grooved, corresponding to the points of pressure, and greatly displaced. I have no doubt whatever but that many of the nervous complaints from which women suffer originate in this way.

Nor are men altogether free from this fault of tight lacing. Many wear tight belts, especially when about to engage in violent exercise. Rupture may thus be caused.

Tight cravats are also injurious; the neck should be loosely clothed. Tight garters interfere with the flow of blood through the veins, and a tendency to varicose veins results. How great the influence of tight clothing is, is shown by a comparison of the frequency with which soldiers and sailors suffer from diseases of the great blood vessels.

Pressure of clothing from its weight may also act injuriously. The full-flowing long skirts are suspended from the waist, which is thus tightly compressed.

Lastly, tight gloves may cause much discomfort. There is no more painful sensation than that produced by wearing a tightly-fitting pair of gloves on a cold day.—Cassell's Magazine.

PLANTS AND ANIMALS.

A Distinction That Is Based Upon False Lines.

The reasons why a plant should always be called a plant, and an animal an animal, are not always very apparent. An animal is a conscious being. I mean that it knows how to discriminate between this and that, reasons about what is good for it, rejects what experience has informed it is not good for it, and has special senses. It is a conscious being—indeed reasons, discriminates.

Here is a great gulf between the animal and the plant! Most of us are ready to acknowledge such simple truths, and we are all wrong, for the differences when sifted are only those of a greater and lesser degree. Some plants like shade, some like light. Why? Well, why do we under some circumstances prefer dark and under others light? When we are healthy we can digest meat, and reject, with good reason, a meal of sticks and stones. A carnivorous plant receives and digests a proportionate meat meal, but feed it with pebbles and bits of stick, and it refuses to receive such dainties. We bend beneath a blow, we protect ourselves from further injuries that we judge may follow—so do the sensitive plants.

With the aid of a specialist in this class of work I am trying to demonstrate the presence of nervous tissue in plants. So far we have not been successful, but the circumstantial evidence is so strong that we may feel quite certain that better methods of demonstration will give ocular evidence of what we seek. The proofs of the struggle for existence in both animal and plant life have been prettily told by Taylor.—Gentleman's Magazine.

Sympathy.

We can be angels to one another in showing sympathy. Sympathy is, in its inmost essence, the response of feeling, the answer of thought to thought; and, thus understood, its effects are akin to those we have just considered. Weakness of belief, as we say, is born of loneliness, but is overcome by communion; and in like manner the spirit gathers strength from sympathy. Sympathy cures. It can calm passion, soothe sorrow, and charm even bodily pain away. It is good for the headache and the heartache. It comforts the child, encourages the youth, heartens the toiler, and smooths the last stages of the aged. It is the angel who never dies, and whose word never ceases. "Arise and eat, for the journey is too great for thee."—Detroit Free Press.

—A dwelling house and garden spot on S. Third street for rent. Apply to Mrs. M. A. Chance.

--Several frosts during the latter part of last week turned the tender leaves of many trees black, and gave to rows of early beans a peculiar color, while new cucumber vines turned white,

—The Eagle claims to havo heard that diphtheria is being spread about town; and intimates that Delano Doctors are not careful enough; and takes its opportunity to give Dr. Catlin another dig by telling what Mother Grundy says. The Eagle should deal more with facts and tell the people that do not all ready know it, that I. Gutzwiller, Jr., who is proprietor of the Eagle has, for years, appeared on the Village records to be bondsman for a saloon keeper in Delano; that our Village Council, now has a bargain with six saloon keepers whose bonds men are supposed to be good; that the saloon keepers pay $500.00 for their license to sell intoxicating liquors and agree to obey the law, which says they shall close on Sunday; that they shall not sell to minors; that they shall not sell to old drunkards. That, unfortunately, the Delano doctor corps contains one who is much, edicted to the use of Spts. Frumenti; that the saloonkeepers have, time, and again, been warned to sell this M. D. no liquor; that last year the then Mayor warned every saloonkeeper in the village except the identical one whose bondsman was I. G. Jr. not to sell to him; that notwithstanding this fact the M. D. can be seen almost any day on our sidewalks so full as to require much more than his share of the way, triumphantly swinging a tin pail of the beverage he loves to excess in his hand. That the Village Council is known to these facts, at least in part, and that it is their sworn duty to enforce the law; that they should attend to such a serious matter as this. That the above mentioned M. D. lost two children patients in one family a few weeks ago, with what he pronounced sore throat and blood poison, but which most people think was diphtheria; that children were allowed to go with sore throats from the house to the Catholic school; that, since that time there has been many cases of which some have been quite severe, others less so. That at least two of the families of saloonkeepers are reported to have had sore throat lately. That the Eagle continually keeps up a howling about other doctors, until a few people who rely on her columns for news are led to believe that this inebriate is the only one whom they can trust; they, haul him out into the country when he is so drunk that he is unfit to prescribe; many times has he written prescriptions which the druggist refused to fill, at other times he gets the druggist to write prescriptions for him; that the same people are informed by the same source that the Health Officer is an ignoramus, and that the Village Council and County Commissioners are either fools or particeps criminis to a gigantic fraud or steal for having anything to do with the payment of quarantine bills, until these poor blind people led by this blind informant believe that law, whether to prevent drunkenness, quarantine contagious diseases, or keep ill disposed people from labeling their neighbors is of no consequence; and officials whose business it is to look after such matters are made to feel that the business is unpleasant and neglect it. If the Eagle would stop its anarchistic teachings and advise its readers to keep the law, and not be continually harping about things they have no foundation for; and be good, and always speak the truth, she might aid in stamping out diphtheria, drunkenness, libel, slander, and various other evils of more or less consequence. Try it once.

—The grand opening of the Minneapolis Auditorium takes place Monday evening May 28. We acknowledge receipt of a complimentary ticket.

—The Catholic school entertainment given last night at the city hall is highly spoken of. We did not have the pleasure of attending and cannot comment.

—Dr. Catlin says, the Eagle's informant to the contrary notwithstanding, he uses customary precautions concerning the visiting of patients with diphtheria.

—Corn and potato planting appears to be nearly through with in this vicinity

—On Monday a case of diphtheria was quarentined at the residence of Mrs. Steffes. Phrona aged thirteen having been taken sick on Sunday.

--The Junior League entertainment on Sunday evening was well received and a nice little collection was raised for buying badges for the members.

—John Bukoski, who lost his residence by fire, a few weeks ago now has the ell part to a nicer one already up and will soon be able to occupy it.

—Eb Brandon's new farm house is drawing toward completion· Mr, B and family have evidently concluded to remain in Minnesota and give up their western trip. "A rolling stone gathers no moss" as Poor Richard says.

—While on our way to the city a few days since, our train unloaded a consignment of Delano flour at Long Lake. Within the memory of many of our citizens the reverse was the case, and Delano people purchased flour from our Long Lake neighbors.

--Many of our citizens, and a majority of the board of education, are sorry to loose Prof. Dewey from our school and from our village. He has greatly advanced our school since coming among us, and to fill his place in our village as well as in the school, will require more than an average man.

—A. W. Wittman is in receipt of quite a fatherly letter from C. G. Roosen, Hamburg Ger., who gives him some advice on securing the lands adjacent to the proposed electric railway and having it all laid out into corner lots. C. G. seems to be enjoying himself amazingly, says his health is fine. before breakfast he studies zoology, at the zoological gardens, during the day he reads newspapers, promenades, boat rides, plays checkers and takes life easy as possible. He is considerably elated to think that, owing to the financial stringency here, he is loosing nothing by being away from home. Among other pleasures enumerated he does not forget his three meals a day; pretty good evidence of health.

--Pursuant to "adjournment" the school board met, on Monday afternoon, to hire teachers. Sure enough Principal Dewey had tired of adjournments" and gone in search of a definite answer, to be obtained more readily than from "some" of our board, and of course another had to be secured. Mr. Dewey highly recomended, Prof. Zeleny for principal and said he could be hired for $100 per month. The board stood four votes for Zeleny, one not voting and Mr. Frazee absent. For assistant Miss Steele at $50. per month was elected; first grade Miss Hagar; Intermediate, Miss Sherry; primary, Miss Cheeley, it was voted that the two latter should attend the University training school this summer. From the tone of the meeting, Delano will now have a High School as is a High School for the next year; and proposes to take no step backward.

LATER, the board took an economical streak and cut down wages of principal to $90 and assistant $45 per month.

--At Monday nights meeting the council debated the question of appropriating $100 for the securing of concerts by the band during the summer. The Recorder and Councilman Horsch stated that they had carefully figured the probable resources, and found that without this appropriation the village would be in debt; Notwithstanding this statememt $50 was voted for the band. As we have said before, a band is a nice thing in a village; but it don't look exactly as if the town should borrow money to hire it this season, under the circumstances; besides if the band is to be kept up at village expense, money appropriated from the village Treasury for celebrating 4th of July and every other holiday there seems no end to the appropriations that will be made for the simple asking .

—It was rather amusing to listen to the eloquent plea of the Village Attorney on Monday evening, to the council for the appropriation of $100, for the aid of the Cornet band "poor men" who could hardly afford the luxury of tooting at their own expense. The exhaustive argument seemed to have the effect of wringing from the too lenient council half the sum asked for, although admitting they would be in debt, even if they appropriated nothing for this purpose. We don't believe a majority of the band would thank any one for classing them as "poor men," as several of them consider themselves quite well to do in the world, and, as we said before, "amply able to toot their own horns." With the Mayor, ex-ex-mayor, Editor of the Eagle, and two of his compositors, cashier of the bank and such other "poor men" as members it seems as if it may exist.

—Preaching in the M. E. Church next Sunday Morning, at 10:45. Epworth League at 6.45. No preaching at night, nor any night this summer the pastor has decided not to preach three times aday. Age will creap on.

—The plan for the water works as far as worked out is to have a well near J. D. Young's residence, on the old Lyle farm, with a tank near by, an eight inch pipe from there to Railroad Ave. smaller pipes from there to the different parts of town; with an eight inch pipe from the power house to the river in case of fire, (we think a useless part of the system, as the tank with what a good well would supply ought to be sufficient for our town) the system could be put in at much less cost without this useless appendage, which would threaten to bring on an epidemic of typhoid fever, diphtheria and kindred diseases whenever used; and in case it was found the well of pure water was not adequate to the demands another could be made, or an extra tank even; or if nothing else would do, this "useless appendage" could be laid to the river when it was found necessary.

--Announcements are out for the first graduating exercises to take place at the City Hall, on Friday, June 8, at which time Emery Cunningham, Edward Freeman, Vernon and Roy Wilder four of Delano's young men will have completed their studies at the Delano public school. This programme should be repeated with a larger number of pupils each successive year; as our town grows in population it should grow in learning. Other towns have their High Schools and it has come to be the requisite for employment in many branches of industry that the applicant be the possessor of a high school certificate. Let not Delano's youth grow to manhood and enter the broad field of industry handicapped by the want of as good a certificate as any of her neighbors can offer. Success to the present graduating class and thanks to Prof. Dewey for his aid in their advancement.

Grand Army Memoral Sermon in the M. E. Church at Montrose. next Sunday at 2 P.M.

A Camp Meeting will be held at Montrose, begining June 14, '94. Dr. Chaffee will be present, "To your tents O Israel.

Wright County Republicans are fearful lest the Democrats carry the county as is evidenced by their desperate efforts to get a candidate on the State ticket, and have a Wright County man up for State Senator, and bring everything to bear to interest their rank and file they possibly can. But what will become of that cancerous sore in Sherburne culminating in an open ulcer when Wright county republicans helped hoist Eaton into the Senate in opposition to Sherburne's man, the regular Republican nominee? Will the proposed plasters Judge Alley or W. E. Cuikin, be broad enough to cover this gaping wound, or strong enough to hold it togeter until election is over.

We were not aware that Editor Tanner of the Waverly Tribune had gone over to the Republicans altogether, we supposed he was only a Populist until we read his reply to the questions sent out by the Minneapolis Tribune the other day.

C. J. Carlson has been appointed Post Master at Cokato; there is talk that he is a new Democrat. We don't know; we wern't consulted. We think the name was, at one timo on the list of subscribers for the GAZETTE.

Phunygraphs.

Ifs, and ands, are bad enough; but Buttz are abominable.

The Populist Sage appears tobe loosing savor, Owen to their canidate for governor.

Probably Owen to Donnelly the Populists will not fuse this year. Tally one for I. D.

If Knute Nelson was in, and Washburn out, of the Senate the tariff bill might fare better.

Quite a number of canidates for the Republican nomination for State Auditor will be Dunn for.

Congressional blood gets heated; and there seems to be a lack of the milk of human kindness; but there is hope so long as the Kyle is kept pure.

Some one says the town of Breckinridge, Minnesota, desires to change its name. How would it be for the Star of Kentucky to change his to Pollard, (a clipped coin,) and save the town the expense and trouble of a change.

Entered as Second-Class Mail Matter, at the Post Office in Delano, Minn

THE Duluth Commonwealth is now on our exchange list. It is a spicy paper and booms Duluth.

THE woman's edition of the Mankato Free Press was received this week. The paper for one day was run in the interest of the new $30000 Presbyterian church to be built there. The enterprise seems to have taken well and proved a success.

GEN. SCOFIELD has issued an order that no troops shall be excused for lawless acts committed by direction of U. S. Marshals, or other civil commandants; but the military officer in command shall be held strictly accountable for his command.

THE Duluth News Tribune complains that McGill's friends are booming him to death, placing him before the public for speaker of the next House of Represenatives when he is not yet elected a member. It does look that way. But how about the Zenith City by the unsalted sea? Dosent she have one or more Candidates for every office that comes along? And is'nt she now booming the whole Towne for Congressman against Major Baldwin? Keep a little still Duluth on the office question.

Fusion a Thing of the Past.

Fusions of political parties have been made for the purpose of vanquishing another party from the field. But they prove in the end very unsatisfactory to everybody; even to those making them. People become tired of the rule of one party grown fat and saucy from their long lease of power, and resolve to unite their forces to down the old party; to break its power; not counting on what they shall get in return; but thinking anything must be better than the present rule. When their efforts to outvote the party they wish to suppress have been crowned with success and they come to divide the spoils the fusionists find their troubles are worse than before; where people have been led to believe things would be made better they find they lack the power, on account of having to divide with their allies, to discharge their obligations. They find when any bill of importance is up before a legislative body made by fusion that the opposition is greater than those favoring the measures; the minority party with a handful of members acts as a balance of power and things won't go smoothly along. The tail wags the dog; the legislation must conform in some respect to the ideas of this little band of fusionists elected to office by the disgruntled of the old parties, and, often consisting mostly of the worst types of politician; men with whom their own party cannot agree; or who have been the rounds of all the parties and fetched up as members of the new organization hoping, by howling against the principles before advocated by them to be landed in some office with a salary sufficient to keep them for a few years; who like a drowning man will grasp at a straw, try to hold their former political prestige. Such men are unfit to sit in the halls of Congress; or to legislate for a state with the various interests of our own. They can make no laws themselves, but in the nature of the situation are in a position to necessitate their consultation, and the securing of their favorable interest before the passage of most bills. This fact makes these the most desirable of positions to the wily, unscrupulous, scheming politician for revenue only; subjects the men occupying them to more than the ordinary temptations of members of bodies in whose hands are the destinies, in no small degree, of the people for whom they legislate, and who exalted them to what should be as pure and honorable positions as there is on the face of this globe. Many men are liable to yield to temptation; and it is wrong for a party, new or old, to place other than good men in the field for these positions; it is wrong too, for party leaders to get together and barter, and trade, and sell out men and measures to other parties, no permanent good is apt to follow this kind of proceedure and while a party may, by forsaking its principles for awhile, assist in disrupting the enemies ranks it opens wide the gate for its own members to go where they please as soon as a man not in accord with the party is placed where that of a recognized leader should be. Soldiers would win a battle under Napoleon where they would flee before the enemy under another leader; so with men in other walks of life. Grover Cleveland failed of an election after declaring in a clear manner his views on the tariff; through the opposition of those calling themselves Democrats; four years later in spite of opposition, with his banner still fluttering to the breezes the people triumphantly returned him to the White House. The people know what they want, and will, sooner or later hit upon a method of obtaining it. Fusion has been tried and failed. The proper thing is to hoist high the banner "EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL, AND SPECIAL PRIVILEGES TO NONE." live up to the inscription; do your duty, on every occasion; then will you inspire people with confidence in your principles, in your men and your measures, and your ranks will fill up; good and wise laws will be enacted and peace, prosperity and happiness be the lot of a contented but progressive nation.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 25, 1894.

President Cleveland on his return to Washington found a radical change for the better in the tariff situation. Senator Teller, after his very sensible speech, telling the republican Senators that they no longer had any reasonable excuse for delaying the final vote on the bill, clinched his argument by forcing a test vote on a motion to lay the bill on the table. That motion received the vote of every republican present, 28 in all, and every democrat present—among them Senitor Hill—,35 in all, voted against it, as also did three populists. That vote removed the last vestige of doubt about the passage of the bill, and leaves republican fillibustering without a leg to stand on, the republicans having claimed that they were justified in using the tactics they did by democratic opposition to the bill. They will now be given a last chance upon the time to agree upon a time to take the final note. Should they refuse the bill will be forced to a vote. There is a feeling of relief to know that the end is in sight.

The Senate committee has concluded the taking of testimony in the bribery case, and it is believed that the report will state the belief of the committee to be that Buttz attempted to bribe Senators Hunton and Kyle. The committee is now taking testimony concerning the sugar trust and its alleged relations with Senators.

The House committee on Naval Affairs has begun the investigation of the Carnegie armor plate contracts, authorized by the resolutions this week adopted by the House. It will probably be a long one, as it covers all the armor made by the Carnegie companies from the begining of their contracts with the government.

Senator Walsh, of Georgia, was natuarally very much suprised when he lerned that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers regarded his bill against any stoppage or interference with trains carrying mails as being aimed against them, and, after telling the Senate that as a journeyman printer his sympathies were and always had been with the laboring men of the country, of whom he was proud to be one, he introduced an amended bill which he thinks cannot possibly be misconstrued by any body. The title of the bill is "To protect the United States Mails", and it provides that any person who shall rob or attempt to rob or maliciously obstruct or retard for the purpose of robbery the passage of any railroad train on which the mails are carried shall be punished by imprisonment at hard labor not less than one nor more than twenty years.

Attorney General Olney, in answer to a resolution adopted by the Senate last week, asking what action has been taken against the trusts under the act of July 2, 1890, has furnished the Senate with the record of a suit begun against the various firms composing the sugar trust, which was dismissed in the U. S. Court for the eastern District of Pennsyvania, with costs against the government, appealed to the Circuit court, which affirmed the action of the District court, and which is now before the U. S. Supreme Court on appeal. Mr. Olney does not say so, but it is inferred from his communication and the accompanying documents that he considers the much-talked-about Sherman anti-trust law a worthless one. Other people suspicioned as much when it was first proposed by democratic Senators.

Coxey, Brown and Jones are in jail, and the deluded who followed them are on the verge of starvation. The lesson should not be lost,

Whether Freedom really shrieked when Kosciusko fell is a matter about which practical folk have doubts, bnt no practical working democrat should have any doubts about throwing up his hat and giving three chears and a tiger for the democrats in the House who had the moral courgae to support the amendment offered by Representative Enloe, of Tennessee, to the Legislative and Executive appropriation for salaries, etc., of the most colossal public sham of the age—the Civil Service Commission, a commission which, although authorized with the best intentions to make it fair and impartial, has been operated from the first day of its existence to the present as a machine for keeping republicans in office. Mr. Enloe has offered this amendment several times when this annual appropriation was before the House, but never until now has he succeeded in getting it adopted, and even now it is not certain that it will stay adopted, as the vote—109 to 71—was taken when the House was sitting as a committee of the whole, and the republicans have given notice that they will call for a separate yea and nay vote on the amendment when the bill is reported back to the House from the committee on the whole, and they will make a desperate attempt to get enough democrats to vote with them to defeat the amendment.

In Line With the A. P. A's.

The A. P. A. boasts of its numerical strength in Hennepin county and boldly asserts that its influence will be felt in the forthcoming municipal election. Its support will of course, be given to the republicans, and, as is shown by a somewhat voluminous correspondence which the writer has had with well-informed parties since the first of last January, it has been industriously engaged for many weeks past in laying its plans to manipulate the republican county convention. It is bent on dictating the nominations for some of the most important county offices, chief among them the superintendence of schools. Deacon Wilcox is its choice for this position; and its members, to a man, as far as it is possible for one not a member of that nefarious organization to find out, are exerting themselves in the deacons be half, using every influence at their command to bring about his nomination. They are persuing the same tactics for which they were so distinguished in the late municipal campaign in St. Paul. There Mr. Doran was their candidate for Mayor. Doran was in truth a member of the A. P. A.; but, as is the case with Deacon Wilcox, he had an understanding with his dark-lantern associates in their secret meetings that his membership should be stoutly denied. This was a design to get the Catholic vote, but it failed, and it will fail with Deacon Wilcox. Doran, too, went about professing great love for the Catholics, But the Catholics were not the fools he took them for. They knew that if his pretended love for them was genuine the A. P. A. would be a unit against him, instead of working tooth and nail for his election.

The A. P. A. is an organization designed to disfranchise Catholics. If it could have its way, no Catholic would be permitted to have any hand whatsoever in educational or governmental affairs. It is a secret, proscriptive society, whose aim is to ostracize Catholics. Good men, Protestants as well as Catholics, will vote against any candidate who favors it even to the extent of refraining from denouncing its principles. The Loyal American, an A. P. A. publication with which the mails, especially of school teachers and Protestant clergymen, is burdened now-a days, teems with the most shameful insults to Catholicity that the mind of mortal man is capable of manufacturing. The portraits of the most distinguished Catholic prelates of the day, including the Pope himslf, are given from week to week, shown up in a way calculated to give the impression that the Catholic Church is plotting and planning for the overthrow of the American republic. This is all calculated to reach the public school children, if not directly, at least through the teachers and Sabbath schools, that the youthful mind may be prejudiced, against Catholicity. And in order to accomplish this hellish purpose, the A. P. A. styles itself the guardian of the public school, and in dictating nominations it seeks first of all to control the nomination for school superintendent. I have known Deacon Wilcox for more than a decade, in former years he had no hesitancy in expressing his contempt for the Catholic church. But simultaneously with finding a bee in his bonnet he made the remarkable discovery that he really loved the Catholics, and he has been preaching love to them ever since. This, however, has not deterred him from introducing anti Catholic books into the schools.

Some weeks ago I reported that he had recommended Dickens' Childs History of England. I added that I had in my possession his own letter to a Maple Plain gentleman making this recomendation. People have been forwarding his letters to me since. I now have in my possession a letter in which he recommends "Myers General History" for use as a regular text-book in the schools. This is a book that no Catholic would wish to have placed in the hands of his children. Of it, Father William McGolrick writes me: "Myers' General History is like the rest of the class who write with a special purpose to please a party, and even to please themselves. Strange indeed, still a fact, how prejudice and party make an author distort facts. When I take up a history, I make all the allowance imaginable for the writer; but when I find the Historian goes out of his way to insult a class, I am disgusted."

Deacon Wilcox is in line with the A. P. A's, and let no one be deceived in this matter. I am thankful for the letters which have been forwarded to me. The Deacon is a great letter writer, and any one who may have one of his epistles containing anything that has a bearing on his candidacy for superintendent of schools, may rest assured that nothing of a private nature will be divulged, if the letter is sent to me. A letter is the property of the person to whom it is addressed, and if he can serve his fellow men in a beneficial way by publishing anything it contains that has a bearing on public discussions, he should do so.

The Buffalo Journal speaks in very high terms of the work Joe Reems is doing as one of the county commissioners of Wright county, and intimates that his district ought to re-elect him because of his faithfulness to the interests of the people. Then came a horse race, which was won by one of the Councilmen's horses; the purse was 55 cents; so we are told. W. Karney and W. Kesler ran a foot race; Karney leading Kesler badly.

Come out you little coward with your slurs and not try to blow them behind our backs to our neighbors for they don't believe it anyhow; and it shows your smartness don't it when we ain't at present. If he would only go out in the cornfield for a scarecrow the people of this town would not laugh at him; for he would be capable of filling that position; when he writes to the Post his ignorance buries his smartness. Don't try to work a bluff, Victor, for we know that you ain't very cruel. Come ahead again and tell us whether we have laid ourselves liable or not, as you think you are so smart.

MUD LAKE CORRESPONDENT.

"The BUFFALO GAZETTE has a dandy correspondent from French Lake town. Yes, indeed, our Catholic county organ needs one from this town, as they are pretty well represented here. And such witty NEWS! He ought to have a button."

The above item I see in the Mud Lake correspondent of the Cokato Commoner; a terrible answer to your French Lake correspondent. This shows intolerance, bigotry and hypocracy. It shows he is unworthy of being an American citizen, as though any man's religion should be used against him; hypocracy, for the same correspondent will howl for anything on the Republican ticket even if it be a Catholic. He must know that that party in this county is under the leadership to-day of a Catholic and that same Catholic will be a candidate for office this fall, probably for Senator, and he will howl the loudest for him And I am glad that the Catholics can furnish brains for even the Republican party; that they can boast of such men as that among their number. But for such bigots as that correspondent I have no time. These people in Cokato and Stockholm can furnish the vote to elect Republican office holders but they hav'nt an officer in the Court House. The idea of calling the GAZETTE the Catholic organ of the county is a little too rich for anything.

Binding Twine.

Henry Wolfer, warden of the penitentiary, at Stillwater has sent out a lot of samples of the prison made binding twine. The twine is of hemp, grown in Minnesota, Iowa and Kentucky, mostly. Mr. Wolfer says:

"This twine will be sold the present season at a price not to exceed 7 cents per pound, and lower, if necessary, to meet competition of any twine of any length and quality that may be placed on the market, said price to be finally determined by the Board of Managers June 1, 1894. All the purchasers of twine previous to that date will be entitled to the benefit of any reductions below seven cents that may be made by the Board. There need, therefor, be no hesitancy in placing orders now, as the prices will be adjusted as above indicated." Farmers who will need twine this fall, if they like the twine, will do well to place their orders in time. Call and get a sample at the GAZETTE office. We have a full ball for examination. 26tf

Opportunity means being face to face with a gate. It implies responsibility. The union of opportunity and responsibility constitutes a crisis. Through the gaitway of opportunity we pass to lesser or larger issues. We connot stand still; we must go forward we may go up or down. Our responsibility consists in returning the pledge entrusted to us. The crisis dilates into an arbiter of destiny. Nay! it is destiny itself in disguise.—The Interior.

On the main street of a certain town a citizen tied a mad dog with a long tether. Many of the passers-by were bitten; some were dying. The citizens in consultation said, "We must found a hospital and fit it out with the most approved apparatus for the cure of hydrophobia." So the hospital was built and kept full. A plain man suggested; "Why build a hospital? better kill the dog." "Kill the dog!" exclamed one of the taxpayers; "don't you know, sir, that that man pays well to keep that dog there?" Now the dog is liquor and the town is America.—The Organizer.

To be a drunkard is wicked. To make a drunkard is wicked. To make a drunkard maker is wicked. To make a law that makes drunkard makers is wicked. To help to make a legislature to make a law to make a drunkard maker is wicked. So the whole business of drinking or selling liquor, or establishing saloons, or legallizing them, or voting for legislatures to licence then is wicked. It is not merely a mistake or an error, but it is desperately wicked. Neither can one excuse himself, nor palliate his wickedness by saying that he was concerned about money or financial questiong, or that many others and many excellant men as well as saloon keepers and their patrons, voted his way. The number engaged in a crime or sin does not effect the personal guilt of each. Let us all learn our individual responsibility for the liquor traffic.—Midland.

FIFTY-THIRD CONGRESS.
Regular Session.

WEDNESDAY, May 23.—Senator Gorman defended the tariff bill in a speech in the senate. A motion to lay the bill on the table was defeated by a strict party vote of 28 to 38. The house continued its onslaught on the civil service commission by striking out of the legislative appropriation bill the paragraph transferring department clerks to the classified service. A bill was favorably reported providing a fine of $500 and imprisonment as a penalty directed at any ex-soldier who postdates his voucher for pension before the 4th of the month.

THURSDAY, May 24.—At the opening of the session of the senate Mr. Kyle urged the passage of his resolution declaring that it was not the purpose of the United States to use force to restore Liliuokalani as queen of the Hawaiian islands, but it went over for the day. The tariff bill was further considered. In the house the amendment to the legislative appropriation bill to have struck out the provision for contingent expenses of the civil-service commission was voted down and the measure was passed. The bill to incorporate the supreme lodge of Knights of Pythias was also passed, and a resolution was adopted setting aside Saturday, June 22, for eulogies on the late Representative Houk, of Ohio.

FRIDAY, May 25.—Senator Kyle's Hawaiian resolution was considered again for half an hour in the senate but no action was taken. The tariff bill was further considered. In the house the time was occupied in the discussion of an omnibus resolution from the committee on war claims, grouping together thirty-seven claims for cotton, etc., aggregating $1,040,000.

SATURDAY, May 26.—In the senate Senator Hill (N. Y.) again attacked the tariff bill and was bitter in denouncing the income tax. A bill was introduced providing that all persons who receive pensions less than $12 per month shall have their pensions increased to that amount, and special provision is made that no widow's pension shall be less than $12. In the house the bill to remit the 10 per cent. tax on clearing-house certificates and other notes issued by private and state banking associations was discussed.

THE MINERS.

Strikers and Deputies Come Into Open Collision.

Trouble at La Salle and Centralia, Ill.—Four Strikers Shot Down by Armed Guards in Pennsylvania—Dynamite Used with Deadly Effect.

WORKERS FORCED TO QUIT.

DANVILLE, Ill., May 25.—Wednesday morning 250 strikers from Kelleyville came upon the Beard mine. This being the third visit of the kind and fearing serious trouble, the men at work fled to the woods. A little later a mob of over 1,000 miners started for the Mission Fields mine. They were armed with knives, pistols and clubs besides having a covered wagon loaded with rides. Those in charge of the mine seeing that the thirty-five deputies would be no protection told the men they could stop work. Many took the opportunity. The men who remained at work were compelled to swear that they would come out of the mines and stay out.

BRAZIL, Ind., May 25.—Striking miners formed in groups Tuesday evening and visited every slope in the county where men were at work and ordered out the employes. All complied, and not a pound of coal is being dug. These slopes furnished coal for the city only, and since they have ceased operations it is difficult to secure coal for domestic use.

Situation at La Salle.

LA SALLE, Ill., May 25.—A mob of 200 striking miners took possession of the Illinois Central Railroad company's property Wednesday afternoon and emptied all the coal out of the chutes on the tracks. The sheriff was called and with his posse finally dispersed the mob.

LA SALLE, Ill., May 29.—A mob of strikers, mostly foreigners, captured a Burlington freight train at Ladd Saturday afternoon, and when it reached Spring Valley the strikers were largely reinforced. At Peru the strikers to the number of 2,000 left the train and started on foot for La Salle. Col. Bennitt and 200 state troops barred their entrance to the city and dispersed the mob, capturing about 100 prisoners, but all except five were released. The others were escorted across the county line.

CITY OF MEXICO, May 25.—The strike of American coal miners has caused the price of northern coal to rise very sharply in Mexico. This, coupled with the attending scarcity of coal, is seriously inconveniencing many Mexican manufacturing industries.

Troops Ordered to the Scene.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., May 26.—On Thursday Gov. Altgeld ordered out four companies of the Illinois national guard to La Salle and five more to Centralia.

Sheriff Taylor, of La Salle county, telegraphed the governor the condition of affairs at the La Salle County Carbon Coal company's mine. He said he with a large force of deputies had been attacked by several hundred miners with stones, revolvers and other weapons, shooting three of the deputies, severely injuring several others, including himself. He was unable to quell the riot, and there was imminent danger of great loss of life and destruction of property if immediate action was not taken by the governor. He appealed to the governor for such military aid as could be furnished. There are 3,000 striking miners at Spring Valley, Ladd and Seatonville, who are likely to come there at any time and continue the riot. A mob is surrounding the hotel where he is lying wounded.

The telegram was confirmed by one from the mayor of La Salle, F. W. Matthison, who states the mob has released one of the arrested strikers from jail. Later the sheriff telegraphed that the strikers were running riot and to forward troops at once.

Sheriff M. J. Helms, of Centralia, telegraphed that he had arrested seventy-five men for conspiracy in destroying property, that he has 200 armed deputies. The mines at Sandoval, Kinmundy and Odin are threatened with destruction by approaching miners, who are also determined to release those under arrest.

Thirty cars of coal the miners have side-tracked at Lyford. The coal is from Kentucky and is billed to Chicago. The men are determined to prevent outside coal going into the market usually supplied by the Indiana mines. All night freight trains on the road have been abandoned while there is danger in trying to haul them through the affected district.

All trains on the Evansville & Terre Haute railroad were held up Sunday at Shelburn, south of this city, and examined by the striking coal miners. Several box cars loaded with coal were taken from the trains at Fontanet, east of the city. The miners' wives are still in charge of the Big Four coal chutes and refuse to let the company coal its engines.

Four Strikers Shot Down.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., May 26.—The long-threatened attack by striking miners on the pits of the Washington Coal & Coke company at Stickle Hollow was made Thursday morning. The fight was one of the fiercest in the history of the mining troubles in western Pennsylvania, and in the section where it occurred as well as throughout the whole coke region the situation it has developed is one of the most intense excitement.

Four strikers are lying dead, and double that number are badly wounded, some of them mortally. Thomas Kenan, of Wood's run, is the only American killed in the encounter with the deputies. The other dead men are Slavs. The wounded men, who fell under the first volley from the deputies, were taken off by the retreating strikers, and even now the actual number of wounded is not definitely known, their friends having the strongest motives for concealing them.

More Militia Called Out.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., May 29.—Three more companies of the Fifth infantry were ordered out Saturday afternoon by Gov. Altgeld on the strength of a message from the sheriff of Woodford announcing that strikers at Minonk were interfering with the running of trains on the Illinois Central railroad.

All Coal Trains Held Up.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., May 29.—The 700 miners who came into this city Friday, bound for Pana, Ill., on a captured Big Four train, have all returned home to await the outcome of the Springfield operators and miners' convention. The men left the city as quietly as they came.

SLAIN IN A SHAFT.

Eleven Miners Killed by Strikers—Six Other Fatalities Occur In a Battle.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Col., May 28.—At 10 o'clock Friday morning eleven men started to work in the Strong mine on Battle mountains. Shortly afterwards a large body of strikers blew up the shafthouse with powder, causing a loss of $25,000, and then dropped 100 pounds of giant powder down the shaft, which was also exploded, killing all the inmates.

Not more than 300 yards from the Strong shaft house sixteen men who had been engaged to go to work in the Independence mine were surrounded in their bunk house, and, after a long parley, agreed to surrender. Each one was armed with a rifle and a brace of revolvers. The arms are now in the possession of the strikers.

Slain in a Hot Fight.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Col., May 28.—The first clash of arms between the striking miners of the Cripple Creek district and the deputy sheriffs occurred at 3 a. m. Saturday. The dead are Hiram Crowley, a miner, and William Rubidean and an unknown man, deputies. The trouble was precipitated in an endeavor on the part of the deputies to make a night march and gain possession of the town of Victor, with the intention of using it as a base of operations in future attacks on the miners. All was quiet until about 2:45, when the train bearing the deputies steamed down within a short distance of the miners' line and stopped. The deputies alighted, 126 strong, and advanced on the miners in full force. They were met with volley after volley from the rifles carried by the miners and the fire was briskly returned. The night was dark, the only light being furnished by a pale moon, and much of the fire was wasted. The fighting waged fiercely for half an hour. The deputies finally yielded being driven by the strikers.

Will Carry Non-Union Coal.

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 28.—The engineers will carry non-union coal. The relation of the coal miners' strike to the members of the certain divisions of the Brotherhood of Engineers was thoroughly canvassed by the convention, the result being an order advising those engineers who have been threatened by the strikers for carrying non-union coal to obey the law.

NO CORRUPT INTENTIONS.

Report of House Judiciary Committee Respecting Judge Jenkins.

WASHINGTON, May 24.—The house judiciary committee has adopted the report of the sub-committee which investigated the action of Judge Jenkins, of Milwaukee, in restraining the employes of the Northern Pacific railway from striking. The report of the committee says the evidence fails to show any corrupt intention on the part of the judge; that he believed the orders granted by him were legal and that while he erred in this respect his errors afford no ground for proceedings against him.

A resolution and two bills will be reported to the house. The resolution will set forth that the house disapproves of the action of Judge Jenkins and holds that he exceeded his powers of enjoining the railroad men from striking. The two bills to be reported will be drawn to carry into effect the sub-committee's recommendation regarding compulsory labor, which was as follows:

"Your committee recommends that all possible doubt as to the powers of judges of the courts of the United States to enforce specific performance of labor contracts by legal process or to compel any person to render involuntary service under any pretext be set at rest by a prohibitory statute."

The second bill will be in accordance with this recommendation:

"The power to punish for contempt is limited by the laws of most of the states, and we can see no reason why a like limitation should not be placed upon the powers of federal judges."

A DOZEN DEAD.

Awful Results of Two Explosions in the Bay of Biscay.

MADRID, May 29.—Details have been received of an explosion that occurred Saturday on the Norwegian steamer Norden at Gijon on the Bay of Biscay. The steamer was taking coal on board when one of the boilers exploded with terrific force. Her decks were shattered and the boats and deck fittings were blown to splinters. Some of the debris was carried across the quay at which the vessel was lying and a piece of timber struck a dock laborer, killing him instantly. Two steamers laden with sulphuric acid and gunpowder were lying close to the Norden. Part of the masts of the latter were carried away by the force of the explosion, and in falling struck the other two steamers, causing great damage to them.

Five of the crew of the Norden were killed and several others were either scalded or injured by the flying debris.

BRUSSELS, May 29.—An explosion occurred Sunday at a mine at Anderlues, killing six miners and injuring several others.

ROUNDLY SCORED.

Captain of Milwaukee Life Savers Blamed for Recent Loss of Life.

MILWAUKEE, May 28.—The coroner's jury in the case of the Cummings disaster returned its verdict Friday night. The verdict severely scores Capt Pratton of the life saving crew for his delay and inactivity, characterizing the statements he made in regard to the disability of the lifeboat as untrue. The jury finds that Capt. Pratton refused the assistance of a volunteer life saving crew, which was the principal cause of the loss of life in the Cummings. Fault is also found with the equipment of the life-saving station and praise is given to the men who rescued Patterson and Gurdis. The verdict may lead to the dismissal of Capt. Pratton. Superintendent Abbey, of the life-saving service, will make an investigation of the Milwaukee life-saving crew.

A Desperado Killed.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., May 28.—Ben Hoffenbach, a notorious desperado, wanted at Monroe, La., for murder, was shot and killed by a sheriff's posse on the Haley plantation near Greenwood, Miss., while resisting arrest.

He Must Hang.

ST. LOUIS, May 28.—The state supreme court has denied the petition for a new trial for Wilson, the negro convicted of the murder of a policeman in this city two years ago. Wilson will hang on June 14.

Work of the Philadelphia Mint.

PHILADELPHIA, May 28.—The coinage of gold at the Philadelphia mint during the present fiscal year will reach $80,000,000, the largest in its history.

THEY DIFFER.

Dun and Bradstreet at Variance in Their Trade Reviews.

NEW YORK, May 26.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

"Storms and floods, prolonged strikes and large exports of gold have done their utmost this week to give business a vacation. But wants unsatisfied during the last year, belated and much lessened, and yet greater than those of any other nation, have caused a volume of trade quite large for the season. Prices of products still tend downward without much speculation.

"It is not surprising that farmers retain wheat at present prices where they can. Corn has been stronger, notwithstanding large receipts and insignificant exports. Cotton has recovered a shade, to 7¾ cents, though receipts for the week were nearly as large as last year and exports much smaller. Pork products all declined with heavy receipts, and coffee is also lower. The astonishing cheapness of wheat and cotton will affect the rapidity of the movement in the fall, and also will directly lessen the amount of money required in moving the crops.

"While the iron industry especially and many others to some extent have been restricted by scarcity of coal and coke the number of works resuming have been greater than the number stopping from other causes. But it is a symptom not to be overlooked that the demand for manufactured products instead of increasing appears for the moment rather smaller than before, and indifference of buyers is shown in cancellation of orders hitherto given. It is a waiting season, but the disposition to wait is this year much intensified.

"Failures diminish in importance, the amount of liabilities for the third week in May being only $2,204,139, and for three weeks, $7,836,972, of which $2,642,687 were of manufacturing and $5,025,007 of trading concerns. The number of failures reported this week is 183 in the United States, against 259 last year, and in Canada 28, against 14 last year, and again there are noted scarcely any of importance."

Bradstreet's view of the situation appears not so rosy as that of Dun & Co. It says:

"The unfavorable conditions prevailing in commercial and industrial circles throughout the country, together with the prospect for no material improvement during the summer, mark the present season as probably the dullest, relatively, for twenty years. At no time since panic and business depression manifested themselves last year have reports as to the volume of sales of merchandise, the manufacture of staple goods, and indisposition of merchants generally to buy except for absolutely immediate wants been so pronounced and so general throughout the country as during the last few weeks. Superficial examinations of business conditions leading to unwarranted optimistic conclusions as to the future of trade have not been wanting; but, as a matter of fact, based on comprehensive and careful examination, the next few months promise a continuance if not an intensifying of existing conditions of extreme dullness and depression.

"Quite unfavorable advices come from Pittsburgh, where there are numerous shut-downs, involving large numbers of men. The total number of industrial employes idle as a result of coal scarcity is placed at 35,000, and the total idle number on account of the strike, which now appears likely to fail, is 210,000. In other industrial lines 25,000 men are reported idle as a result of strikes, making the total number now idle 235,000. An encouraging industrial feature is the probable settlement of next season's iron and steel wage scale without a strike."

TORE DOWN THE FLAG.

Canadian Militia Insult the United States Consul at St. Thomas.

TORONTO, Ont., May 28.—About 1,000 of the Queen's Own volunteers went up from here Thursday to celebrate the queen's birthday at St. Thomas, a small city about 100 miles west of Toronto. While there some of the volunteers imbibed too freely and hauled down the American flag from United States Consul Willis' office. Lieut. Col. Smith, of the Canadian militia, was a witness of the incident. Others attempted to interfere, but the militia were persistent and not only hauled down the stars and stripes, but destroyed it. Consul Willis was very angry. Col. Smith tendered an apology to him, but he was not satisfied, and wired an account of the affair to the authorities at Washington and to the United States consul at Ottawa. What the affair will lead to it is impossible to say. The citizens of St. Thomas generally deplore the incident, and in no way sympathize with the volunteers' action.

To Build on the Old Site.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The house committee on public buildings has decided to erect the new Chicago building on the site of the present post office. The lake front site was abandoned, and it is proposed that the new building shall cover the entire block and be ten stories high. Supervising Architect O'Rourke told the committee that the work could be completed in three years. Meantime the post office will occupy rented quarters. The amount of the appropriation was not decided upon, but $4,000,000 was the amount which the members seemed to favor.

FOUND HIM GUILTY.

Senate Committee Convicts Buttz of Attempted Bribery.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The special committee of the senate appointed to investigate the charges of attempted bribery of senators on the part of Charles W. Buttz, the North Dakota lobbyist and ex-congressman from North Carolina, has submitted a report to the senate. Buttz is found by the committee to have made the attempt at bribery, despite his denial, and Senators Hunton and Kyle are exonerated from all blame.

A Test Vote.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—Senator Teller (rep., Col.) in the senate moved to lay the tariff bill on the table. The motion was made to test the sense of the democratic majority and to see if the bill was to be the bill which the democratic party intended to pass.

The motion was defeated by a strict party vote—28 yeas to 38 nays.

Both Senator Hill (N. Y.) and Senator Irby, whose positions have been the subject of gossip from time to time, voted with their democratic associates, as did the three populists, including Senator Peffer.

Killed in a Church Riot.

HAZLETON, Pa., May 29.—The trouble over which the congregation of St. Casimer's Polish Catholic church at Freeland has been divided for a year or more culminated Sunday in a bloody riot in which four men were killed. In addition a large number of parishioners sustained numerous cuts and bruises by being hit with clubs, and to escape arrest fled.

Railroad to Be Sold.

NEW YORK, May 26.—Judge O. C. Vorhis, of the common pleas court, has ordered the sale of the Pittsburgh, Akron & Western railroad, on proceedings by the Central Trust company, of New York, in foreclosure of a mortgage of $3,600,000.

Killed Herself.

MOBERLY, Mo., May 25.—Miss Lillie Ross, of St. Louis, committed suicide by shooting herself in the right temple with a revolver in her room at the Arlington hotel at 10 o'clock Wednesday night. She recently left St. Louis after being arrested on suspicion of stealing money from her employer.

A decision against the Northern Pacific road in the mineral land cases was handed down by the United States supreme court.

Lady Berkeley's Story.

By E. B. Perkins.

[Copyright, 1894, by the Author.]

WE WERE a house party of fifteen in a most beautiful part of the Berkshire hills. We had been brought together for a week, and five days had passed most pleasantly. But, alas! the sixth day was cold and rainy, and our poor hostess was in despair to know what to do with her houseful of guests.

The morning had dragged by its weary hours.

The men found occupation in the billiard-room or library. The women tried with fancy work or music to while away the time, but an air of restless despondency had settled over these heretofore gay people.

At five o'clock tea was brought in, and we all gathered around the big fire in the hall.

The guest of honor in our party was a Lady Berkeley, lately come to America for a visit, and a very pretty and charming woman.

I had once before met her—two years ago in Rome—but knew nothing about her, though some one had told me she had quite a history.

For the few days we had been together in this country house she had been the life of the party and had won the admiration of all.

Her beauty and her attractions were unusual, but this wretched weather had cast a gloom over even her high spirits.

As we were all taking tea together, Mr. Jonson, one of the party, laid down a book he had been reading and remarked:

"A good story, but so improbable!"

"I don't know," said Lady Berkeley; "that might have happened; stranger things have."

"I doubt it," replied Mr. Jonson. "I don't believe in fact ever being stranger than fiction."

Lady Berkeley smiled and said: "Perhaps a very strange fact has never been brought to your notice."

"No," admitted Jonson. "I've lived nearly forty years, and have still to see anything improbable happen in real life."

"Well," she replied, "I can tell you a strange story, the truth of which I can vouch for."

"I should like to hear it," said Jonson, and the other members of the party, having overheard the conversation, drew their chairs nearer to the fire and gave her their attention.

"It is curious," commenced Lady Berkeley, "that I should tell you the story of an American family, living in a small New England town, and for fear some of you might know the people concerned, I shall change their names.

"About twenty-five years ago, there lived in Milford, Conn., a clergyman and his wife and child.

"These two parents worshiped their little girl, for it was late in life that she had been sent to them.

"As the child grew older, they seemed to grow younger, and life seemed to them well worth living.

"The old clergyman was never so happy as when, with his little Imogene on his knee, he told her stories, or taught her her first lessons.

"It was their greatest pleasure to deprive themselves, that they might give more to their child.

"Their income, however, was small, and, though sufficient for the comfort of the family during their daughter's childhood, it was not adequate for their expenses as she grew into womanhood.

"LITTLE IMOGENE ON HIS KNEE."

"This matter of income troubled these good people for some time, until the father conceived the idea of tutoring college men who had been unfortunate in not passing their class examinations.

"He, therefore, went up to New Haven, which is but a few miles from Milford, and made arrangements to take into his family one or two of the students during the summer months.

"This proved a very feasible plan, and the pecuniary results were most satisfactory.

"Thus matters went on for a year or more.

"It was during Imogene's seventeenth year that her mother was invited to spend the summer in Europe with an invalid cousin, and, as her husband and daughter urged her to go, she finally consented to leave them for three or four months.

"She sailed early in June, and, two weeks later, there came to Milford a young man from Yale, to be tutored for a couple of months.

"He was the son of Mr. Prentice, a well-known New York broker, and a very charming fellow.

"It took but a short time for the young people to fall in love, and in a very few weeks he asked permission of Imogene's father to marry her.

"The clergyman was delighted and wrote to his wife, saying:

" 'The young people are so happy, and the fellow very attractive. I couldn't wish for a better match for our daughter. My only objection is their extreme youth.' Then he added that Mr. Prentice, Sr., had been up to see them and was equally pleased with the engagement.

"In the course of ten days came a cablegram from his wife saying: 'Break engagement at once. I sail for home by next steamer.'

"This message was a dreadful blow to the young people concerned, and greatly bewildered the clergyman.

"However, nothing could be done but await his wife's arrival, and then matters would probably straighten themselves. In the meantime his wife had sailed, and landing in New York the following Saturday had driven directly to the office of the young man's father and asked for an interview with him.

"Mr. Prentice was as much distressed at the broken engagement as the others, and he readily granted her request.

"It is easier for you to imagine, than for me to describe his sensations, as she explained her cable by this story. She began immediately:

" 'Mr. Prentice, your wife was a very dear friend of mine. We were at school together, and shortly after separating as schoolmates, she married you and went to the south to live. I heard from her occasionally, and knew she was very happy, and, later, heard that she had a son.

" 'About four years went by, when, one day, she wrote to us that you were in Europe on business, her little boy was with some relatives, and she was alone and very miserable in a New York boarding house, and asked me if I would come to her.

" 'My husband was away from home at that time, and there was nothing to prevent my leaving, so I came to New York and joined your wife.

" 'I had been with her but a few days when another child was born—a little girl.

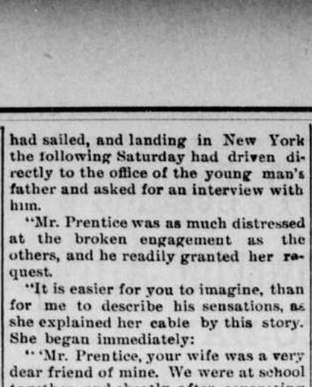
" 'From the first I said the mother could not live.

" 'She knew it also, and called me to her bedside.

" 'She took my hand, and said:

" 'Jeanne, you have been my best friend all my life, I have not long to live, and I ask a last favor of you.

" 'I know your great sorrow in life



"THE SON OF MR. PRENTICE."

is that you have no children; I ask you now to adopt my baby.

" 'If I could die, knowing my little girl was to be brought up under your care and influence, I should be happy.

" 'My husband is still a young man, and, in all probability, will marry again. In that case, a stranger to me will be the mother of my child.

" 'My husband has the boy to remind him of me, but this baby I wish you to take.

" 'Will you do this for me?"

" 'I hesitated but a moment, and then I promised.

" 'She was too weak to say any more, and she died that day, without speaking again.

" 'The same evening I wrote to you telling you of your wife's death, and added the awful lie that the child had died too.

" 'I signed the letter by my maiden name, that you might never trace me and discover your child.

" 'After the funeral I took the baby home, and told my husband I had adopted her, that I was under bond of secrecy not to say where, but that I knew her parentage.

" 'So my husband asked no questions, and we brought the child up as our own.

" 'I think he has even forgotten that she is adopted.

" 'The rest you know; you came home from Europe, settled in New York, became prosperous, and as your boy grew up you sent him to college at New Haven.

" 'Then, with "the irony of fate," during my absence from home, he comes into our house, falls in love with our daughter, and, but for my tardy confession, would have married his own sister!' "

Lady Berkeley paused in her narrative, and sighed.

She was looking into the fire with her hands clasped on her knee, and I thought her face pathetically sad.

Silence reigned for a minute, but before anyone had a chance to speak, Lady Berkeley continued:

"Well, the young people were told the circumstances, and Mr. Prentice went up to Milford and wished to claim his daughter.

"The clergyman and his wife were broken-hearted, but dared not oppose the rightful father after their selfishness in depriving him all those years of his own child.

"A compromise, however, was made, that Imogene should live in her old home three months of the year.

"She then went away with Mr. Prentice, but never came back to Milford, for, before the year was out, she was engaged to an Englishman, and soon after married him."

Again Lady Berkeley paused, and, looking at Jonson, said, with a smile:

"Is not this strange enough for fiction?"

"Yes," he answered, "and I feel as though it must be, it was so unnatural in the girl to go and live with her father, who was practically a stranger."

"She was awfully hard-hearted, wasn't she?" asked one of the party.

"I am not an impartial judge," said Lady Berkeley, "for I was the girl!"

Small.

The young man from the city had been fishing. He hadn't had much luck, but it was more than he was used to, and he looked very jubilant as he strode into the farmhouse kitchen with his catch.

"What'je git?" asked his host.

"Oh, nothing much. Just a few catfish."

"Mean them?" the farmer inquired, pointing with his pipe stem.

"Certainly. They're not very large. But there's no doubt about their being catfish."

"Wal, mebbe they passes for catfish out whur you come from. But here we calls them kitten-fish."—Washington Star.

—Lady—"Ah! how fortunate that we should happen to meet you, doctor. Do you know, we have been suffering some from—from—I think you term it congestion of the brain, and, besides, we experience great difficulty in walking. What would you advise us to take now?" Doctor—"A cab, ladies; a cab."

A Taste of Rough Justice.

A man living near Claybank, whose name cannot be learned, has been in the habit of coming home drunk and beating his wife. The wife has borne this treatment uncomplainingly. One evening recently he began his old tactics. This time his wife appealed to the men working on the clay piles for protection, and they were not slow to respond. They took the husband and tied him fast by the arms to a tree. Then they administered such a thrashing that when he was taken down again he was almost dead. The workmen kept him with them over night and let him go in the morning with threats of vengeance should he again beat his wife.

The mark objected to as being a deception was the device of L. F. Pillsbury, of La Grange, Ill., and though without the "Best" mark, was in other respects similar to the genuine mark on flour purchased from the Pillsbury mills in Minneapolis.

HOME TRADE.

An Organization Perfected to Advance Northwestern Industries.

The proposed convention in the interest of Northwestern industries was held in Minneapolis, Wednesday, May 23, as planned. It was attended by representatives from many of the cities of the Northwest. Numerous delegates from St. Paul were present, and St. Cloud, Faribault, Mankato, Superior, Shakopee, Sioux City, Decorah and other cities were represented by delegates. After the meeting was called to order, a committee on permanent organization was selected, and while this committee was engaged in the preliminary work of the convention, remarks were made by Mayor Eustis, George A. Brackett, G. M. Gillette, J. S. McLain, editor of the Journal, of Minneapolis; John A. Willard, of Mankato; Gen. Pope, of Mankato; John P. Hodgson, of St. Paul, and others. The deliberation of the committee was reported in the afternoon, and with slight changes the articles of incorporation were adopted by the convention. The articles of incorporation provide that the name of this association shall be "Northwestern Home Trade association," and the object of the association shall be to promote loyalty on the part of Northwestern people to Northwestern manufactured products and a sentiment in favor of buying all classes of merchandise from home dealers. The principal office of this association shall be Minneapolis, Minn., and offices may be located by the board of directors in each city or town having a general organization. It has provided that branch associations may be held in any city or town in the Northwest for local work, and it is to be the work of this local association to stimulate a sentiment of preference for the goods made at home. This not only applies to buying from home manufacturers, but to encourage the consumer to purchase from home retailers, and the consumer, who is always a producer, is to have in mind that if he buys products of the home workman, that workman will have the means in turn to buy his product. This movement is not outlined in the interest of any particular city or town, nor indeed has the organization been affected with the idea of creating any state lines. It is to be a broad Northwestern movement and the association has elected officers and directors from all parts of the Northwest. John A. Willard, Mankato, has been elected president; T. B. Walker, Minneapolis, 1st vice president; John F. Broderick, St. Paul, 2nd vice president; J. A. Gregg, St. Paul, treasurer, Geo. W. Parker, Minneapolis, and E. S. Warner, St. Paul, secretaries. The directors for the year are from Superior, Faribault, Winona, St. Cloud, Red Wing, St. Paul and Minneapolis, subject however to be increased by the choice of new members as the association increases in membership. The secretaries will do a great deal of work in the outside cities and towns of the Northwest in organizing branch associations and working to the general end desired. It is hoped that this movement will receive the endorsement which it deserves and that the consumer will see it to his interest, prices and quality being equal, to buy his supplies from home merchants and that the preference for Northwestern goods, will be built up among Northwestern people. The motto "Patronize those whom you would have patronize you" has been sounded and it is believed that this motto lived up to will bring greater prosperity to the Northwest and enable the factories which have been closed for want of fair Northwestern preference to be again in operation, giving employment to Nortwestern workmen.

SHE GOT HER BRIDAL KISS.

The Bridegroom Did Not Give It at the Altar, But Did His Duty at the Church Door.

Many guests at a fashionable church wedding a few days ago were surprised when they saw the bridegroom stop near the door and kiss the bride. It was so marked a departure from the old rule of ending the wedding ceremony by a kiss that it caused a great deal of comment.

Very few of those who saw that interesting feature of what the bride regarded as an important part of the ceremony know how it all came about. Hundreds of friends had watched the lovely girl as she moved gracefully toward the altar. After the ring which told that she was a bride had been placed on her finger the young bride looked lovingly toward the bridegroom. One could see she was ready to receive the bridal kiss.

But the bridegroom had apparently forgotten that part of the ceremony. He seemed interested only in getting out of the church, and abruptly offered the young woman his arm. With a little pout of annoyance she placed her hand on his arm, and they started toward the church entrance.

The bride did not intend to leave that church without having obtained a bridal kiss, which to her seemed to be of as much importance in the ceremony as the words of the minister.

When near the door she whispered something to the bridegroom which he, in his efforts to get beyond the gaze of the throng in the church, failed to understand.

"You did not give me my kiss," the bride repeated in a tone which caused her words to be heard by some of the guests near the door.

"I beg your pardon, but I forgot all about it," whispered the bridegroom, and right at the door he gave the bride the kiss she had expected to receive at the altar.

Then the bride, complete happiness having been restored by this rounding out of the marriage ceremony, walked gracefully out to the carriage and was driven away with a face wreathed in smiles.—N. Y. Herald.

Protecting Cottolene.

The N. K. Fairbank Company of Chicago have lately brought suit in the United States Court against W. L. Henry, of this city, for $5,000.00 for infringement of their trade mark "Cottolene." The N. K. Fairbank Company sets forth that they originated, prepared, and put upon the market a new food product consisting of refined Cotton Seed Oil and a small proportion of Beef Suet, making a pale yellow material of the consistency and substance of lard, almost without odor and intended to take the place of lard in cooking.

In order to indicate the source and genuineness of their new food product, they originated, coined, and used as a trade mark the word "Cottolene." The healthfulness and many other advantages of Cottolene over lard were so apparent that Cottolene became at once very popular and is now largely sold all over the country.

The new food product and its name "Cottolene" have become widely known as the product of The N. K. Fairbank Company. The trade mark is described as a "trade mark for Oleaginous Food Substances, &c," "consisting of a head or neck of a Steer or other bovine partially enclosed by sprigs and branches of the Cotton plant."

The N. K. Fairbank Company charges that W. L. Henry, of Macon, Ga., a dealer in fresh meats and food products generally, has been and is endeavoring unlawfully to avail himself of the benefits of the name "Cottolene" and its popularity; that he has been and is selling a product similar in kind, but inferior in quality, under the name of "Cottolene" to the injury of the original and genuine "Cottolene," and to the loss and injury of its manufacturers The N. K. Fairbank Company.

The infringements upon the trade mark of "Cottolene" have become so frequent, and so many dealers are selling an inferior article and claiming it to be Cottolene that The N. K. Fairbank Company are determined to protect their customers and propose to sue every retail dealer who is thus imposing upon his customers and infringing upon The N. K. Fairbank Company's trade mark.—Telegraph, Macon, Ga.

DELANO DIARY

BUFFALO GAZETTE $1.00 per year.

—A dwelling house and garden spot on S. Third street for rent. Apply to Mrs. M. A. Chance.

—The Board of Education contemplate the fitting up of another room in the rear end of the hall on the first floor, at the school house, for laboratory purposes.

—The boys are now importuning our too lenient village council to appropriate money to base ball games. They can't afford it boys. The money is all spoken for, and more too.

—Peter Jaunich's Brass Band assisted by Prof. Bohn, and a part of the old Watertown band furnished the music for Decoration Day, at Watertown. Pete is pretty proud of it.

—Our amusement loving citizens will be pleased to hear that the High School scholars have yielded to many requests and have decided to reproduce their play "A Box of Monkeys." Everyone will surley attend as the play is very amuseing and the price of admission low.

—We interviewed Councilman Coffin this noon concerning that "power house, which was to be a magnificent brick structure but has been changed to a frame building." He is as noncommittal as a clam; but says: "time will tell; these newspapers often publish things they know nothing about."

—Anybody that favors using river water for villages should read the article in this mornings Minneapolis Times, as to how the cities are abandoning the use of such water; and of the terrible state of affairs in that city at present and which is but a repetition of what they have been having before, in winter cholera, typhoid and other zymotic diseases. Read it, and don't lets have the same thing in Delano.

—Rev. J. W. Powell, Sr., preached a fine memorial sermon on Sunday. The audience was fair sized for the short notice given; but an old soldier's wife was heard to say: "Old soldiers don't seem to be so plenty on memorial days as they are on pension days." There was but five of them out while Billings would consider it an off day if he didn't have at least four times as many on his pension voucher day.

—The Eagle announces that next week she will "open a query column and will to the best of its ability answer any questions correspondents may ask relative to historical, political or local events." She says she thinks it will be interesting to her readers. We think so too if lots of questions are fired in that might be concerning the career of that "rara avis." As a local event we predict she will wish she was quarantined before she gets far with this column.

—Neighbor Buckley, in the Eagle, following the idiosyncracies of that bird, tries to lay all the blame on the GAZETTE for the inability of our village to pay $100, for concerts this year. The band is a nice thing in town; and there is plenty of material in it, judging from Buckley's standard of fitness for musicans, the fatness of the pocketbook, to keep it going without the help of those with less cash. If neighbor B. is "perturbed" because we think so, we will grant that he is one of the "poor ones."

—Two members of the school board are to be elected in a few weeks. The terms of I. Gutzwiller and John Cunningham expiring. A great deal depends on the Board of Education what kind of a school we have. Be careful and select only men who have an interest in educational rather than financial matters. The finances can't well run behind worse than for the past ten years. The school has for the last two years done better toward becoming a High School, however; but a new financier might do better toward paying off the $10,000.

—A dance at Anthony Dramalla's, near the pine tree, is being worked up by Paul Sunday, for tomorrow, Saturday night. It will probably end on Sunday.

—We are informed that the new teachers offered positions in our school will accept them. It is hoped to have Delano appear on the list of High Schools whenever a new list is made.

—Talk about your patriotism: tell of the lack of a kindly feeling for America and American institutions, and then remember that in Delano the only flag floated to the breezes, and the only bunting exhibited to tell that this is Decoration Day was on the St. Peter's school. Acts speak louder than words.

—On Wednesday evening June 6th, the scholars of the High School will reproduce the "Box of Monkeys." The object of the entertainment is to assist in paying the expenses of commencement exercises.

The cast of characters will be the same as in the previous performance, and is as follows:—

Chauncey Oglethorpe, bashful, E. I. A. Freeman.
Edward Rulston, not bashful, R. C. Dewey.
Mrs. Oudego Jones, an admirer of rank, Maud Goodrick.
Serra Bengaline, a prairie rose, Grace O'Hair.
Guinever Landpoore, an English primrose, Allie Murphy.

Admission 15cts. No reserved seats.

—The Eagle says, editorally, "conserning our last week's article on quarantine: "What the doctor wanted to say is hard to tell, and what he did say is still harder." If the Eagle hasn't brains enough to understand the article menticned we can't very well help her. It is the way she is built. She don't want to understand it. Other people can see the connection referred to quite plainly. Perhaps the Old Bird was befuddled from assisting in breaking laws she was bondsman to the village for keeping is why she can't understand better.

—The Village Council held a special meeting on Friday evening. Mr. Pike was present with the plans for water works, and some modifications, to lessen expense, were made. We did not learn if that "useless appendage" to connect the well with the river was left off or not; but we are of opiuion that it could as well be dispensed with, for the present, at least; as in all probability a good well or two of large size will furnish all the water the village is likely to need for years: even to sprinkle the streets with. And people would much prefer the well water for drinking and cooking purposes. They also, on motion, instructed Mr. Pike to prepare a notice of receiving bids for water works and electric lights, on June 13, 1864. The same to be puplished in the IMPROVEMENT BULLETIN, a weekly Minneapolis paper. Home firms desiring to bid will take notice.

—As no preparations had been made to formally observe Decorotion Day at this place this year, most of those interested in keeping the day went to neighboring towns for that purpose. But in the afternoon about fifty persons assembled at the cemetery south of town where Comrade Wash Rader acted as chairman, Joseph Van Eman led in a short prayer. Mr. F. H. Lindsley made a speech, followed by remarks by C. H. Vorse and Dr. Catlin. Mr. Lindsley spoke of the origin of the custom of decorating graves; of the poetry of the custom as suggested by Washington Irving, in his Sketch Book; and of the patriotism taught by observing the day in an appropriate manner. He suggested the advisability of effecting an organization for the purpose of preparing for the observance of each return of the day. He closed his speech by calling on C. H. Vorse as an old soldier to give a speech.

Mr. Vorse responded with some appropriate remarks. As he had been a soldier he could speak from experience. He thinks the day should be faithfully observed each year.

Dr. Catlin was called upon and responded by heartily endorsing Mr. Lindsley's suggestion to have an organization, whose business it should be to prepare for future occasions of this kind. He was not yet 12 years old when the war began but with an old shotgun learned to drill as well as any of the boys who went south and left him at home; he missed the company when they had gone. There are those who missed relatives, killed in the war. The doctor closed his remarks by reading a few lines he had written and which by request we give below:

On the thirtieth day of the month of May,
Set apart, they say, as Decoration Day.
We are gathered here, to drop a tear,
In memory dear, of those we revere.
And while with flowers, in shady bowers,
We cover the grave, of each soldier brave,
Who fought, bled, and died, his country's pride,
To free the slave; his country save;
Or that our flag might in triumph wave,
Our minds revert, to the times when alert,
Our boys in blue, noble and true;
Forsaking all, at their country's call,
Went forth to fight; battle for the right.
On the grave's brink we are led to think
Of the camp-fires bright; where, at night,
They sit, and told of exploits bold;
Or dreamed of home, as they tossed and rolled
On beds of mould, so damp and cold;
Of the morning call, for each and all,
To be up and ready, strong and steady;
Of the line of battle, the musketry's rattle;
Of when men fell, by shot, and shell;
Of the dead on the field they would not yield;
Of the living few, as they withdrew;
Then of the close, when there arose
A cloud of sorrow, in the hearts of those Whose fathers and brothers to sisters and mothers
Returned no more with the others.

School Notes.

VERNON WILDER, Editor,
E. CUNNINGHAM, Assis't.

The school is now undergoing the trying ordeal of the high school examination. For ingenuity in asking questions the persons who make out the high school questions are not to be excelled.

We were asked the other day why the exercises at the graduation of a class are called "commencement exercises", and were obliged to confess our ignorance on the subject. We have since looked it up and find that originally the exercises were held at the beginning of the term after the graduation of the class and then were very appropriately called "commencement exercises" but when the change to the last of the term was made the name was not changed.

The High School Dramatic Company will make its last appearance before the footlights, next Wednesday by request.

The Class of '94 take this opportunity of thanking Miss Cheely for the beautiful badges which she presented to them. They are an artistic combination of purple and gold, the colors of the class.

"John Smith was sent to Powhatan and was condemned to die and he had his head on a block and as he was just going to throw down his heavy war club when his daughter Pawhantas flew round his neck and begged pardon and they left Smith go and he brought a sack of corn to Jamestown."

"The moundbuilders were a race of beings who inhabited the Ohio and Mississippi rivers and the Great lakes."

The above are extracts from a couple of history papers at the last examination.

It would seem that the Mound-builders were a race of fish.

County Cullings.

With a good, straight, reliable ticket free from trading stock, nominated fairly and early, Wright county and the 38th Legislative District Democracy stand a good show of electing some of their men.

Another plaster proposed by eminent Republicans of the 38th Legislative District, consisting of Wright and Sherburne County, for puckering together the ragged edges of that yawning, cancerous sore is to give Sherburne two places on the legislative ticket. Some one even had sand enough to Dare Elk River.

Frank N. Stacy, our Washington's Birthday orator last February has left the Minneapolis Tribune and purchased an interest in the Spectator. His articles on tariff taxation will now be better reading than ever. And the Spectator will loose nothing of its reputation for being a live paper; unless it be, that it will be lyelier than ever.

While at the County Seat on Saturday arternoon we picked up all the political pointers we could in the limited time at our command besides catching a fish in Buffalo Lake. The Populists had just wound up their meeting. Mr. Vandergon said in answer to the question "How about fusion this year, will there be any?" "Just the same as before; there will not be any." To which we said "That's right." We like to see people vote according to their convictions. But be sure and have right convictions. Al Sexton didn't appear quite as loquatious as common; while it seemed to us that Dave Cochran was not feeling very well himself, there "might be Senegambian in the fuel pile thongh". We didn't learn how many were present nor what was done further than to arrange for another convention soon, to elect delegates to the State eonvention. It didn't seem to be known about town that a meeting was being held. Of all the Democrats we heard express themselves none favored fusion. A prominent Democrat from French Lake wants "No fusion in his." Michael Jaeb was arguing the McKinley bill, in Probate Court. Billy Cochrane and Col. O'Leary were up to their eyes in business. Treasurer McKnight and assistant Junken were being powerfully pestered by persistent people's paltry pelf, in payment for taxes. Isaac Podas was not in when we called; neither was Lamson; but business seemed to be moving along all the same. Post Master Nugent is still thar. A. Y. was working away trying to figure out Peace and Harmony for the G. O. P. and although he exercised not a little of his eloquence and right smart argument he did not even succeed in convincing us that that awful cancerous sore in Sherburne county could be healed by the Alley or Culkin plasters as suggested. Is it any wonder that a good many Republicans who dislike to see their idols go down, advocate keeping Alley and Culkin in the places they now have, and to which they have some hope of returning them, rather than place them up for a target for their neighbors in Sherburne to even up accounts on?

THE BATTLE OF LIFE.

Life has battles far and wide
To be fought on every side,
Shall they be as they should be,
Crowned at last with victory?

Were these battles nobly fought?
Were we true in every thought?
Have we stooped a soul to save
Who was sorrowing to the grave?

And the wretched, lonely poor
Who came shyly to our door,—
Did we food and raiment give
That they might in comfort live?

Then in sickness and in woe,
Did we to there bedsides go,
Where their suffering bodies lay?
Did we try their pains to stay?

Soon life's battles will be won,
All our life work will be done,
All our sorrow, joy and pain,
Ne'er will come to us again.

Then when we shall be no more,
And we've gained that happy shore,
God will bless us for the right
If we've conquered in this fight.

Davenport, Ia. B.

IF President Cleveland will stiffen up that vertebral columu of his and veto that mongrel, conglomerated, patched up excuse for a Democratic tariff bill, he will be doing about the correct thing.

THE idea of electing a Legislature to sit as an electoral college for a United States Senator and nothing more is wrong; and will give our Supreme Judges, and Attornevs at law business declaring laws unconstitutional just so long as it is permitted to go on.

FROM the Duluth News Tribune we learn that "Crow Wing and Anoka counties have elected delegates favoring Bob Dunn for secretary of state." Is that what Republicans are sending delegates to the state convention for? Is there no issue but that of whether or not Bob Dunn shall be Auditor?

SENATOR EATON, in last week's Journal gave Senator Keller quite a puff and one of the city dailies copied it and credited it to the GAZTTE. If Senator Keller deserves a puff he ought to have it; and if Senator Eaton desires to give it to him he should be allowed to do so: but we don't think the daily should be so careless as to credit Senator Eaton's puff of Senator Keller to the BUFFALO GAZETTE.

SOME of our exchanges advocate the nomination, by the state convention of a candidate for U. S. Senator. While it may be all right for the people to elect a man to that high position by a direct vote. it don't look just right to elect men to the legislature to transact the important business of our state simply because they are willing to pledge themaelves as subservent tools to vote for this or that man to go to Washington.

THE Union, a paper published in Minneapolis glyes a new declaration of independence which it says was adopted unanimously, at a meeting of 5,000 of the unemployed of that city. It starts out with the assertion that "We hold these truths to be self-evident; that all men are created equal inheritors of the bountiful gifts of nature." Recites the list of grieyances usually found in Populist papers and winds up by saying:

"We therefore, believing in the capacity of people to govern themselves and to peaceably remedy all the evils that now afflict them, and believing that by wise laws all citizens may be completely protected in their right to an equal share of the bounties of nature, and the rights of children and unborn generations may have ample security for their natural inheritance. do solemnly declare here in the presence of all we hold dear, by our hearths and firesides, that we pledge our sacred honor never to stop our endeavors to regain our freedom until the last vestage of tyrany and bad government be abolished, and we ask all good citizens to unite with us in our patriotic endeavors.

List of Patents.

Granted to Minnesota inventors this week. Reported by C. A. Snow & Co. Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents Opp. U. S. Patent Office. Washington, D. C:

A. A. Ambler, St. Paul, Book-holder. J. A. Geselius, Spring Vale, Drag-saw. M. Hall and W. H. Baker, St. Paul, Railway-rail joint. K. A. Klose, Richfield, Wrench. C. J. Mober, Minneapolis, Grain sleigher. F. A. Ryno, St. Paul, Button-riveting machine. A. P. Thompson, Minneapolis, Cigar-tip cutter.

THE intention of the law making it the duty of the Legislrture to elect U. S. Senators was clearly for the purpose of placing this power in the hands of as intelligent men as possible; and not for the purpose of making a political issue of the election of legislators and filling the halls of our State-law-making-body with anybody that can control the most votes for U. S. Senator, whether they can make laws or not.

I. DONNELLY goes for the editor of the Rushmore Gazette, because he suggested that the Coxey movement furnished another opportunity for the sage to switch. I.D. has switched so much that people have come to expect it of him. But it doesn't seem to suit that gentleman at present to have people think he is going out of the Populist ranks or even going to advocate fussion. He seems to think stability for a season the best. He does seem to be doing well gulling people into reading some of the worst trash that comes before the readers of the state today, under the guise of argument. We give a specimen "Go poor creature, and boast that you are tied to a party, like a battered tin kettle to a yellow dog's tail; clattering along with a whoop, though the slush mire and filth of the political cowyard, it is something to be proud of. Isn't it?" If that is what the Sage calls argument; or elevating literature, deliver the people from a second attact Is it not proper for a party to have principles; Fixed ideas on subjects? Do not the old parties divide on principle? Do not they each have their line of thought? And is it not right for people to make their selection and stick to it so long as necessity requires? Is their anything to be gained by shifting; even a lost seat in Congress?

Why Was it.

The Duluth News Tribune reads the Grand Army men quite a lecture for inviting Nr. Towne and not inviting Mr. Kinny to speak on Memorial Day: it says: "Mr. Kinny went into the Union army at the very beginning of the war and fought all the way through it, coming out with an honerable record after more than four years service before he was 20 years old. This was while Mr. Towne was still almost in swaddling clothes. To fail utterly to invite Mr. Kinney, to ignore him entirely, and to make Mr. Towne so prominent a figure in the celebration almost looks as if the managers were trying to make a political movement." Of course, and Maj Baldwin belonged to the old Iron Brigade, and served in Andersonville, and is Congressman from our District and the News Tribune and the G. A. R. should have been so magnanimous as to have counted him in too.

FROM CALIFORNIA.
Homeward Bound.

[BY HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.]

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., May 28, 1894.

I left Los Angeles on the evening of the 26th by the Southern Pacific Route which is the only R. R. system running into California. Other trunk lines conduct their business with San Francisco over the Southern Pacific line. In the matter of R. R. connections Los Angeles is ahead. It has the two systems running into its corporation limits, namely: The Southern Pacific and the Santa Fe lines.

After leaving Los Angeles the Sierra Madre and Tehachapi Mountains were passed in the night and at daylight next morning the train was passing through a broad plain without undulations, the word level is hardly applicable to these even surfaces of California. They have a very slight descent from the foot hills or mountains where they begin which renders them practicable for irrigration, the water being collected during the rainy seasons in reservoirs in the mountains. This region seems to be an immense valley drained by the Sierra Navada and Coast Range Mountains. Large portions of the country especially the more southerly or distant from San Francisco are lying in a state of nature being a prairie surface with scattering live oak reminding one of the praries east of the Mississippi in Minnesota thirty years ago, at St. Anthony, Anoka and toward St Cloud with the scattering low burr oak. These large tracts of country are apparently adaptable to cultivation. The reason of their not being settled was not learned. It may be owing to the non-application of capital in developing irrigation privileges. As the train advanced northward habitations and cultivations became more numerous increasing in thrift as well as numbers, reminding one of the broad prairies of the Mississippi valley in appearance and products leaving out the cultivation of Indian corn and substituting grapes. I am informed that corn is not much cultivated in California. There are many broad wheat fields and perhaps barley and many acres of those crops are being cut and cured for hay. Alfalfa is also cultivated extensively for hay and may constitute the larger percentage of the hay product of the state.

While many of the fruits that are raised about Los Angeles are to be seen in the San Joaquin country, the citrons, fruits (orange and lemon) are not grown there, so in passing the Tehachapi mountains it is apparently a transition from the South to the North Temperate zone.

I am remaining in San Francisco to secure a berth in the sleeping coach. With the great amount of travel to and from the Mid-winter Fair one must arrange for sleeping priveleges on the train several days before starting on a journey. As the climate of Frisco is not favorable for my purpose I do not expect to see the fair or much of the city, I have discovered however that it contains much real wind and water.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 1, 1894

The positive and emphatic denial of Senators Voorhees, Jones, Vest, Harris and McPherson, democratic members of the Senate Finance committee, of each and all of the sensational stories which haye been printed concerning the sugar trust and its alleged influence in the making of the sugar schedule of the tariff bill, has convinced all fair-minded people that the alleged sugar trust scandal had no fimer foundation than the idle gossip of irresponsible persons, based entirely upon conjecture; and there is little room for doubt that the investigating committee will report at the close of the taking of testimony, and that the report willbe signed by every member of the committee. Present indications are that Scotch verdict. "not proven," will be rendered on the charge that certain Senators speculated in sugar stock while the character of the sugar schedule of the tariff was in doubt, on account of the difficulty of obtaining convincing evidence on that subject. It is generally regretted, outside of the Senate, that the committee should have raised the old question of the right of the Sennate to compell newspaper men to give the source of information received by them, in connection with this investigation. No good can come out of it, and, as Senator Hill aptly said, much harm may.

The last concerted effort of the republican Senators against the tariff bill is now being made against the sugar schedule. This is not because these are so much opposed to the sugar schedule. This is not because they are so much opposed to the sugar schedule--as a matter of fact a number of them are known to favor it--but because they believe that if they can put sugar on the free list enough democrats will refuse to vote for the entire bill to enable them to defeat it.

But the scheme will not work. It is now as certain as anything not yet done can be that democrats enough to make a majority cannot be drawn into this trap, although there are a number of democratic Senators who would like to see sugar on the free list. As soon as the sugar schedule is adopted it is believed that the republicans will agree to set a day to vote upon the bill, as they admit that if they cannot beat the sugar schedule they cannot beat the bill.

The southern democrats in the House are making a determiued fight to secure the repeal of the tax on State Bank notes. The debate has been going on all this week and will probably continue for a week or ten days longer, the unacted upon appropriation bills having been temporarily laid aside. The result is in doubt, depending, many believe, on the atttendance when the vote is taken. If the attendance exceeded 289 the probabilities are that repeal will be defeated, as the largest claim made by the friends of repeal is 140 votes. But inasmuch as those who favor the repeal of the tax are more interested in securing it than those who oppose it are in preventing it the changes are in favor of the repealers mustering their full strength on the floor of the House when the time comes to vote and winning, if they can get that 140 votes claimed. Some very interesting and instructive speeches have been made by democrats both for and against repeal. The republicans have not up to this time taken a conspicious part in the debate although they are solidly opposed to repeal. Representative black, of Georgia made a strong and bold speach in favor of repeal, in which he took the ground that the general government had no right under the constitution to impose such a tax, and stated his belief that the U. S. Supreme court had no more right to bind the action of the House than the house had to bind the Supreme Court.

The investigation of the alleged armor plate frauds by the House committee on Naval Affairs has so far brought out nothing starting. The committee will visit Homestead to see if anything more than was found out by Secretary Herbert's naval experts can be learned.

Postmaster General Bissell dosen't endorse the idea of the government running the telegraph lines of the country in connection with the Post Office department, and he has written a letter to Chairman Wise, of the House Commerce committee, giving his reasons. He thinks the Post Office department has all that it can do justice to in extending and perfecting the mail facilities of the country, and that the expense of a telegraph system would be out of all proportion to the benefit that would be derived therefrom by the people.

President Cleveland and Secretaries Gresham, Carlisle, Smith and Morton attended the Memorial Day exercises at Arlington as guests of the Grand Army of the Republic.

CORRESPONENCE

FRENCH LAKE FACTS.

The crops in our vicinity are begininning to suffer for the want of rain.

John Dalley, of Annandale, was doing business in town, Wednesday.

Peter Nylen went to the cities on Wednesday to consult physicians concerning his eye that was injured recently.

Mr. Stain, of Dassel, hauled lumber from here last week.

Great improvements have been made on our road; and still there remains quite a lot of tax to be worked.

The last night of May some of the young folks felt happy and others mad on account of May baskets.

It was amusement to listen to E. A. Rousseau's stump speech Friday. M. C. O'Donohoe's hired man witnessed it and says he will make a good speaker if he lives for a century.

John Calander visited relatives in South Haven, Sunday.

A. W. Dorman and A. J. Lindburg are attending court at Buffalo.

John Dalley was through our town Monday, buying cattle to ship.

Mike Mooney, of Maple Lake, visited relatives here over Sunday.

W. C. O'Loughlin spent Sunday with relatives at Maple Lake.

A large number of the boys of this town witnessed the game of ball between Albion and Chatham. It resulted in a tie.

There was a social gathering of the young folks at the house of Mike O'Shea, Friday evening. Dancing was engaged in. A pleasant time is reported by all.

Those parties that are trying to start a fight by lying, between a young gentleman of Chatham and one of this town are engaged in rather unmanly business; in order that malice, hatred and spite would satisfy their minds; they are not worthy of being called men, or citizens of Wright county. There is no shame in them, for if there was they would not show their jealousy and bigotry in that way. If they had everything their own way they would be all right; but the folks have stood their abusing as long as they could. And they are not going to be dogged around by a few idlers.

In answer to the Post correspondent from this town he said we will soon give away what is the matter with us. We have already published our reasons in the paper and if he could be furnished brains enough to read it he would not make such a foolish statement. He has also stated that he overlooked our foolish work; he did because there was nothing to publish, unless a tie; and he has noticed that they don't thrive well at us. He is getting mad now; there are tears in his eyes; but he is a coward with all his backers. He said that they might draw us in some backward place and then what would happen we don't know, but we hope he won't loose his hat there when he will be in such a hurry from there. We now have satisfied our mind with him; and will let the matter drop as he never denied anything that has been published about him; but if he throws more mud we will will paste it on him again.

MINNEAPOLIS MENTIONINGS.

MINNEAPOLIS, June 4—Decoration day in Minneapolis was quite generally observed as a holiday, most places of business being closed at least for a portion of the day and employees glven a holiday. But only a few of them spent the day in honoring the dead by their presence in decorating graves or at any of the exercises in honor of the dead heroes. From early morning people could be seen in carriages and on street cars with cut flowers and potted plants wending their way to the different cemeterries to pay a tribute to dead friends who died in their country's service. The procession which formed on Nicollet Ave. and marched to the Exposition building was of no mean porportions and yet it was small in numbers as compared with the many thousands who were seeking amusement. They were afforded ample opportunity to find something to their liking; base ball, at the grounds back of the West Hotel, bicycle races, boat races, etc. at the lakes and horse racing at Minnehaha driving park as well as many more places of amusement, furnished a place to which the many thousands, who cared more for the enjoyment of a holiday than weeping over the graves of old soldiers, found a place of amusement, even old soldiers were seen hanging on the street cars on their way to Lake Harriett to see the races. Nor do I blame them a day of amusement away from the store the office, and the shop is worth a great deal to any man and I am glad to see every one that can, enjoy the release from business. With the trial of officer Maney before a Court Martial at Ft. Snelling for the killing of Capt Hedburg, and the trial of Streeter in the district court for the stealing of several hundred thousand dollars from the Guaranty Loan Co, the legal fraternity are much interested in watching the great battle between council, the outside that profession sometimes fails to see when the public good is conserved by the days of fighting over technicalities in the law for the purpose of delaying the ends of justice. If a man is innocent he should not fear coming to trial and should not thank his council for keeping back his trial so that he could the more rapidly prove himself innocent, if he is guilty it is due the public that he should have a fair trial and be punished for his misdeeds. A short time ago and Menage and Streeter were the great financiers; to day they are criminals. Then newspapers were extolling their ventures and they sprang rapidly into prominence as rich men of the city. This leads us to ask the question can a man grow wealthy in a few years and do it honestly? I doubt it. In many cases, yes I think I am safe in saying in all cases in which men suddenly become wealthy it is by a system of gambling which we delight to call financering but none the less gambling if it is not done with cards and poker chips. Better were it if a little sooner we should begin to ask ourselves in what manner can such a man be accumulating his riches so rapidly and yet honestly.

Bishop Fowler preached the baccalaureate sermon at the colosseum yesterday to an audience of several thousand people on the subject Make Haste Slowly. It was a masterly sermon and I think as applicable to the class of people who aim to get rich in a few years without earning their money as to a graduating class. In these times when every thing is done by electricity the tendency is too great among all classes to accomplish their ends and aims at too rapid a pace and this is the reason for the many failures in life, it is to the faithful and determined plodder that the crown is given. It is our greatest forces that move most quietly.

Binding Twine.

Henry Wolfer, warden of the penitentiary, at Stillwater has sent out a lot of samples of the prison made binding twine. The twine is of hemp, grown in Minnesota, Iowa and Kentucky, mostly. Mr. Wolfer says:

"This twine will be sold the present season at a price not to exceed 7 cents per pound, and lower, if necessary, to meet competition of any twine of any length and quality that may be placed on the market, said price to be finally determined by the Board of Managers June 1, 1894. All the purchasers of twine previous to that date will be entitled to the benefit of any reductions below seven cents that may be made by the Board. There need, therefor, be no hesitancy in placing orders now, as the prices will be adjusted as above indicated." Farmers who will need twine this fall, if they like the twine, will do well to place their orders in time. Call and get a sample at the GAZETTE office. We have a full ball for examination. 26tf

A UNITARIAN minister in Chicago has severed his connection with that denomination because it is not sufficiently liberal to suit him, and proposes to start a church of his own, where the membership will have the utmost freedom of thought. A WESTERN genius has invented a machine for making gas for illuminating purposes out of wood instead of coal. The machinery is very simple, consisting merely of a retort and purifying chamber, with a tank for holding the gas. THE tough paper which comes from China and Japan is made from manilla fiber. The new or fresh fiber is not used, it being too expensive, but after it has served its purpose as rope or cordage and has become old it is carefully picked to pieces, made into a stringy pulp and manufactured into paper. The paper is singularly strong; when rolled up into a string or cord it is a very good substitute for cotton or flax twine. Its strength is solely due to that of the manilla, which is one of the strongest and one of the most enduring fibers known to the manufacturer.

THE exodus of Scandinavians this year from this port, says the New York Sun, to their homes across the sea has been nearly twice as large as in any previous year. Most of them come from farms in New England and the west. The hard times have driven them to their old homes, where they can live about twice as cheaply as they live here. The steerage rates to all parts of the Scandinavian peninsula are lower than ever because of competition between English and German lines, and that is also an inducement for the north country men to go home at this time.

THE Chicago common council recently passed an order declaring that "no person, firm, company or corporation shall expose for sale, sell or offer for sale to any person or persons, corporation or firm, directly or indirectly, within the city of Chicago, any cigarette or cigarettes containing opium, morphine, glycerine, jimson weed, belladona or sugar." This order amounts practically to a prohibition of the sale of cigarettes, as there are none of the cigarettes now sold that do not contain some or all of the deleterious drugs named. It seems that the cigarette "must go."

FIFTY-THIRD CONGRESS.
Regular Session.

TUESDAY, May 29.—A bill was introduced in the senate making it unlawful for any person to send obscene literature or any other matter of indecent character, or any article intended for immoral use by express. The tariff bill was further discussed. Adjourned to the 31st. In the house debate on the state bank tax repeal bill was begun, Mr. Cox (Tenn.) speaking in its favor and Mr. Johnson (Ind.) presenting the opposing arguments. Adjourned to the 31st.

THURSDAY, May 31.—The senate adopted a resolution declaring the senate to be in favor of a policy of non-intervention with Hawaiian affairs. Senator Sherman spoke on the tariff bill, and during his remarks said the McKinley bill had been persistently misrepresented as a bill to increase revenue, when as a matter of fact it decreased revenue $80,000,000 a year. An amendment making all lumber duty free was adopted. In the house a bill was passed for the appointment of an additional judge of the district court of the United States for the northern district of Illinois, and the bill to repeal the state bank tax was further discussed.

FRIDAY, June 1.—A petition was presented in the senate from the "New England Industrial Army" asking legislation that would guarantee work to the unemployed. The tariff bill was then taken up and the great battle over the sugar schedule began. In the house the senate bill providing for the carrying out of the award of the Paris tribunal of arbitration for the protection of seals in Behring sea was passed. The state bank bill was further considered. At the evening session private pension bills were discussed.

SATURDAY, June 2.—In the senate the second day's debate on the sugar schedule was preceded by three hours of discussion of a resolution to throw open the doors of the committee investigating the method of forming the sugar schedule, but no vote was taken. In the house a resolution was introduced for non-interference with Hawaiian affairs. A reduction in the wages of laborers to one dollar a day by the district commissioners caused a resolution of inquiry to be offered.

In the house the time was occupied in discussing the state-bank tax bill. A senate joint resolution appropriating $10,000 to defray the expense of the sugar investigating committee was agreed to.

An alarm sounded early in the evening gave warning of what might be expected, consequently no one retired. The women and children were removed at once to places of safety and the men returned to watch the arrival of the waters. The city has not recovered from the big flood of last week and this affliction will double the distress.

The Field Columbian Museum Formally Opened at Chicago.

Many Interesting Relics of the Great Fair Disclosed to the Public Gaze — The Simple But Impressive Dedicatory Exercises.

HAS NO EQUAL.

CHICAGO, June 5.—In the presence of 10,000 enthusiastic Chicagoans the already famous Field Columbian museum, the epitome and memorial of the great World's Columbian exposition, was formerly opened to the public at 2:30 p. m. Saturday. The dedicatory exercises were brief and simple, and at their conclusion the people took possession of the splendid gift presented to them by the generosity of Chicago's philanthropic citizens. The doors just opened will not be closed on any day in the year, and this noble monument to Chicago's enterprise and public spirit will always be accessible to all who wish to enter it.

The inaugural ceremonies consisted of prayer by Rev. Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus, a brief address by Director in Chief Skiff, encompassing a history of the organization of the museum, followed by an oration by President Edward G. Mason, of the Chicago Historical society. At the conclusion of the oration President E. E. Ayer of the Museum association arose and formally declared the museum open to the public, and in a few moments the vast audience had spread over the entire building inspecting the great collections of relics and works of art gathered from every land.

MORE BLOOD SPILLED.

The Conflict Between Coal Miners and the Lines of Transportation.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., June 6.—A telephone message from Shelburn says the troops were fired on under cover of the darkness Monday night. Four of the strikers were killed in the return volley. Shortly after midnight the Indiana light artillery not already in use was started under command of Capt. Curtiss for the scene of the outbreak.

FARMERSBURG, Ind., June 5.—When the local freight, north bound, having passed unmolested through Shelburn and Curreyville, arrived at Alum Cave switch, a branch of the Evansville & Terre Haute railroad, running 12 miles back into the hills and terminating at Alum Cave mining camp, it was stopped by twenty-five or thirty armed strikers. The engineer was ordered to back up the coal cars on the switch. No stop was made until Alum Cave was reached. There the coal cars were sidetracked, and the engineer and fireman, with their engine, were released.

SHELBURN, Ind., June 6.—The Evansville & Terre Haute railway trestle, half a mile above here, was badly splintered early Monday morning by dynamite or giant powder. The trestle still bears up trains, but it furnishes evidence of a terrific explosion. Miners indignantly deny that they are in any way responsible.

CHICAGO, June 6.—United States Marshal Arnold, with a large force of deputies, went on a special train on Monday to Streator in response to orders by Judge Grosscup, on application of counsel for the receivers of the Santa Fe railroad, for the purpose of arresting miners who are interfering with the running of trains at Streator and Coal City. The fact that the receivers were appointed by the United States court gives the federal authorities jurisdiction.

Let Hawaii Alone.

WASHINGTON, June 2.—A resolution was reported from the committee on foreign relations and was agreed to unanimously, declaring that of right, it belongs wholly to the people of the Hawaiian islands to establish and maintain their own form of government and domestic polity; that the United States ought not in any way to interfere therewith, and that any intervention in the political affairs of those islands by any other government would be regarded as an act unfriendly to the United States. The vote was taken by yeas and nays and the result was announced as yeas, 55; nays, none.

Fire in a Tenement House.

NEW YORK, June 2.—A terrific explosion, followed by a fire, occurred at 4:30 o'clock a. m. in a distillery on the ground floor of a double tenement house, 129 Suffolk street, resulting in the death of Lizzie Yaega, aged 4 years, and serious injuries to four other persons. Twenty families tenanted the building.

Cherokee Indians Get Millions.

TAHLEQUAH, I. T., June 5.—The disbursement of $6,500,000 to the Cherokee Indians began here Monday. It will take the treasurer two weeks to complete the payment at this station, after which he will go to other points and distribute the funds until each Indian has received his share.

Negro Democratic League.

WASHINGTON, June 5.—C. H. J. Taylor president of the Negro National Democratic league, has issued a call for a convention to be held in Indianapolis August 2.

ITS JUBILEE CELEBRATION.

The Y. M. C. A. of All Lands Observes Its Fiftieth Birthday.

LONDON, June 4.—The thirteenth international conference of the Young Men's Christian associations of all lands has begun here. Entertainment has been provided for all the delegates, of whom about 2,000 are expected. There are about 200 delegates from America. Nearly every civilized country in the world will be represented. By special permission of the council of the city of London a large pavilion has been erected on the Thames embankment. It seats 21,000 people, and in it all the delegates will be served each day with lunch and tea. It is handsomely decorated with the flags of all nations. This conference is called the jubilee celebration because it commemorates the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the first Young Men's Christian association by George Williams June 6, 1844.

The present gathering, besides being the jubilee of the association, is the thirteenth universal conference. These international conventions have been held every three years since 1855. The first universal conference was held in Paris.

To appreciate the brevity of the existence of the Y. M. C. A., while contemplating its remarkable growth, one needs only to reflect that its founder, George Williams, is still in active business life as senior partner of the great dry goods house of Hitchcock & Co., of London, of which he was in 1844, when he established the nucleus of this immense religious organization, only one of the clerks. On June 6 of the year named he called a meeting of the eighty young men who were his fellow clerks, in an upper room of the store of their employers, and there organized the first "Young Men's Christian association." In the brief space of forty-eight years Mr. Williams has seen the work which he started extend throughout the whole Christian world. At this time there are 4,416 associations in forty-six different nations.

There are 350 college associations in America alone, with a membership of 22,000, which makes the largest college fraternity in the world. In all the leading colleges of the United States, and in most of the lesser ones, the Young Men's Christian association is impressing its deep religious convictions upon the students.

The railroad branches are also doing a great work, the highest possible indorsement of which is found in the fact that $140,000 annually is expended in this branch of the work.

LONDON, June 6.—The reception tendered at the Guildhall at 4 p. m. to the delegates in attendance upon the international conference of Young Men's Christian associations was a magnificent event. The lord mayor, on behalf of the city corporation, conferred the freedom of the city on George Williams, the founder of the Young Men's Christian association, in testimony of the appreciation of the council of his long services in the cause of philanthropy and his especial effort for the welfare of the young men of the city.

STRIKE HURTS TRADE.

Business Shows the Effects of Mining Troubles.

NEW YORK, June 4.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

"It is a sign of cheering import that in finished business, represented by clearings and railway tonnage, there has been less decrease since the strike began than might have been expected. But in inchoate business, the orders which start the wheels, to result in tonnage and payment weeks or months later, there seems to be an actual decrease. Meanwhile the consequent interruption of traffic and industry increases. The stoppage of iron furnaces between the Alleghenies mountains and the Mississippi river has become complete and a great number of concerns manufacturing iron, and others requiring soft coal or coke for fuel, have been forced to stop. Business cannot increase in volume under such circumstances, and yet payments through all clearing houses for the week show a decrease of only 20.8 per cent, compared with last year. Though a large number of works are idle the demand for products is not what might be expected either in volume or in urgency.

"Again the lowest price ever recorded has been made for cash wheat, 56¼ cents at New York, against 75 cents a year ago, while the average in May, 1892, was 90 cents, and in April, 1891, $1.18⅛. Corn is stronger, with exports about half as large as a year ago, and the unfavorable outlook for oats results in a higher price. Pork products are weak with continuing large receipts. Cotton has varied little, though receipts from plantations have fallen off, for stocks in sight are very large, a new crop, for which prospects are decidedly good, is drawing near, and the demand for goods is uncertain.

"Liabilities reported in failures for the fourth week of May were $2,563,087, and for four weeks ending May 24, $11,391,042, of which $4,445,606 were of manufacturing and $5,806,891 of trading concerns. Reports yet to come in may increase the aggregate to $14,000,000 for the month. Failures this week have been 183 in the United States, against 238 last year, and 27 in Canada against 21 last year. Only two failures, both banking, are for $100,000 or more."

Bradstreet's says:

"The decidedly unfavorable condition of general trade reported last week continues without material improvement. Continued delay of tariff legislation prolongs the stifling effect of wholesale business. The great coal strike continues without sign of early improvement, no concession having been made by either side. More mills, factories and furnaces have closed their doors for want of fuel. There are no new labor strikes of importance to record but almost all of those previously reported are in existence."

FLOODS IN THE WEST.

Disastrous Effects Felt in Missouri, Colorado and Oregon.

PUEBLO, Col., June 2.—Pueblo has been visited by the worst flood in its history. Several thousand people were rendered homeless and property was damaged to the amount of $100,000. Four breaks in the levee on the north side and two on the south side have flooded the region between Eighth street and the river on the west in a zigzag course, thence to Fourth and Main, Second and Santa Fe, and everything south of and including First street. On the south side the flooded area extends from West Fourth street bridge through the Rio Grande yards to Union avenue. Practically everything west of Union avenue from the river to C street and all west of Victoria avenue, Stanton & Snyder's addition, is under water.

The loss of life and damage to property are appalling. For 3 miles up and down the banks of the Arkansas the water was from 3 to 15 feet deep. Trees were uprooted and street cars carried over 100 feet from their tracks. Only a few unfortunates were able to save any of their household effects. Most of the dwellings were only one story, and were either entirely submerged or carried off their foundation by the current. The carcasses of horses, cows, dogs and sheep floated around in the whirling water. The flood brought with it mud and sand, filling cellars of the business houses and first floors of the stores with from 18 inches to 3 feet of slimy mud.

PORTLAND, Ore., June 4.—The Columbia river was still rising on Friday. The fertile bottom lands along the river from the Rocky mountains to the sea (600 miles) are all inundated. The residents fled with their household goods to higher ground. City basements here are flooded as far back as Ninth street.

BOULDER, Col., June 4.—The flood in Boulder creek has caused great destruction to property in this city and surrounding locality. In this city five houses were swept down stream. The occupants were rescued by a relief corps. All the city and railroad bridges have been washed away. The towns of Crisman and Salina, small mining camps in Boulder canyon, about 7 miles from here, have been totally destroyed and over 300 people rendered homeless. A number of the placer mines are ruined. The Sunset branch of the Gulf railroad has been completely washed out. All the crops in the St. Vrain valley have been destroyed by the flood. The total loss in this city and in the adjacent territory is estimated at $500,000. On account of the storm and floods, telephone and telegraph wires were rendered useless and outside communication has been cut off.

DENVER, Col., June 4.—Platte river continued to rise until 3 a. m., and a raging torrent continued pouring through this city. Colfax and Jerome Park were flooded at 11 o'clock Thursday night and the people living on the low ground had to flee for their lives. The railway embankment was washed away in places and bridges were badly damaged. The loss will not be very great, but the inconvenience will be extreme. In Jerome Park and vicinity 175 families were driven out of their houses and are camped on higher ground.

MANITOU, Col., June 4.—Business is practically suspended and hundreds of men are working to save their property. The stream from Williams canyon is rushing over Mineral Water park, leaving gravel in place of grass. Tons of earth have been torn from the pavilion grounds. Dynamite has been used frequently to demolish gorges.

IDAHO SPRINGS, Col., June 4.—The damage by the flood in this county is estimated at $100,000. The storm was the longest and most disastrous in the memory of the oldest inhabitant. On the mountain tops, instead of rain, 18 inches of snow fell. Almost all the bridges over Fair creek and its branches are gone. Some houses were washed away and mines flooded.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., June 5.—As a direct result of the high water in the Missouri river, which will not begin to recede for some time, the once prosperous village of Winthrop, 30 miles south of St. Joseph on the Rock Island, Hannibal & St. Joe, Missouri Pacific and Kansas, Joseph & Council Bluffs railways, will soon be wiped off the face of the earth. The Missouri river when it first began its spring rise this year began cutting the bank at the edge of the town and adjacent to it, and now half of the place has melted into the river, together with half a dozen farms of 160 acres each. The channel of the river was a half mile west of Winthrop last year, but to-day that channel is a sand bar, and the new channel occupies what was once the main street of the village. The water is now within a few rods of the tracks of the four railroads, which parallel each other at that point, and is rapidly eating its way into the railroad right of way, and all four companies are preparing to abandon their roadbeds and enter Atchison from a point farther north.

The ranching districts of northern Colorado are all damaged by reason of the destruction of irrigating ditches and reservoirs. The rains melted the snows on the mountains and snowslides are reported from many districts, fortunately without loss of life.

EZETA'S CAUSE LOST.

Defeat Forces the President of San Salvador to Resign.

PANAMA, June 5.—The Star and Herald received a dispatch from San Salvador saying that in a battle at Santa Ana, May 24, the government troops under Gen. Antonio Ezeta were defeated, and Gen. Ezeta was killed. Six hundred soldiers also fell in the battle. Gen. Bolanos was wounded. President Ezeta has resigned in favor of Carlos Bonilla. A counter revolution is sure to break out, as Bonilla is not generally acceptable. Possibly Gen. Manuel Rivas may become president.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—A dispatch received by the state department announces that the revolutionists in Salvador have triumphed completely and that President Ezeta has fled the country.

All Deny It.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—The testimony in the senate inquiry has been made public. Protestations of innocence were made by all the senators whose motives were questioned by the committee. Senator Mills, Secretary Carlisle, Senator Vest and Senator McPherson answered all questions put to them, maintaining the honesty and integrity of their positions.

FOR ALL OCCASIONS.

The Pretty, Popular and Very Serviceable Waists of Silk.

It is certainly true that the silk waist has come to stay, and the dealers are selling more of them this spring than ever before. They have so many advantageous points to begin with, they are cool and comfortable, and have a fresh, puffy appearance which is desirable; then again, they are inexpensive and can be worn with any kind of a skirt, giving a new effect at a very small cost.

The silk waist range in price from three dollars and seventy-five cents to twenty-five dollars, and every kind and quality of silk is used. In the cheaper grade a changeable surah is used, a great deal and the waist is made full, on a tight lining, with two ruffles running across the back and front, by way of trimming. All the expensive waists are lined and boned and quite as many go inside as outside of the skirt. A fetching little waist, with two ruffles around the belt, is called the "frisk," and it is very pretty on a small slender figure.

People who do not care for the changeable can purchase an inexpensive waist in a quiet color, such as brown, black or navy blue, and these will be very serviceable for traveling and general street wear.

Fancy runs riot in the evening waists, and lace is used for trimming in great profusion.

A beautiful thing of eminence pink silk has five rows of white insertion from the shoulder seams and neck to the waist line, and the fullness of the silk puckers out between the bands in a Frenchy way. To emphasize the fullness of the sleeves, five rows of lace are sewed around in ruffles, each ruffle falling over the other. These dainty waists are for summer days, and are lined with the thinnest material possible.

Silk waists have been much in vogue for the theater, and during the brief opera season very elaborate ones were seen. For an allround useful waist a wash silk is invaluable. When it becomes soiled or apparently hopelessly dirty, it has only to be thoroughly rinsed in borax water and it comes out like a new thing. These waists are loose, without any lining, and follow the style of the shirt waists, being very simple with just enough of a masculine touch to satisfy the present craze among women for "mannish" things.—Boston Advertiser.

A FARMER'S DAUGHTER.

A sight discerning hearts to bless,
In peach-cheeked wholesome loveliness,
Is the country girl who long has toiled
In a tiresome round—yet all unspoiled.
From morn till night with a heart so light,
She answers the carols of blithesome birds,
As she toils content with a kitchen task,
Or with dimpled arms in the creamy curds.
Perhaps she gathers the gentle kine
Mid odors of hawthorn hedge and clover;
Perhaps she runs in a fairy race
Under the rustic fence or over.
Not in the city will all men find
The stalwart lasses of this good kind,
The rosy cheek and the dancing curl,
The stalwart form and the teeth of pearl,
The strength—with sense—of the farmer's girl.

Her soul is clean as her eyes are clear,
She fills the bounds of her homespun sphere,
Caring but little for hoarded wealth.
Her heart and cheeks have the hues of health—
Rich in the joys without alloys
In touch with nature, the flowers and trees,
Her mind content in the wholesome poise,
Absorbed in blessings from such as these,
Her life is level, her words are true,
Her heart as light as a dancing feather,
Her soul's horizon as good to view
As highland's tinted with purple heather;
The frankest eyes 'neath hair a-curl,
The lithest motion—our pet and pearl—
The red cheeked, wholesome farmer's girl.

A LONE FISHERMAN.

Tranquil Fishing Donkeyback. His Years of Adventure.

"The picture of a man sitting on a burro in mid-stream, in the heart of the southern Sierras, miles from anywhere, has nothing remarkable in it," said the naturalist; "but when you consider the burro as asleep, and the rider holding a fishing line with one hand and a well-thumbed copy of Œdipus with the other, which he is reading through clouds of smoke from a well-filled pipe, the scene takes on another phase.

"Such a man I met one day in the great river of verdure known as the Arroyo Seco, that winds away from Los Angeles up through the San Gabriel valley, entering the Sierras at Pasadena and for miles passing through a region of varied delights.

"'Senor ——,' I began.

"'Sebastian,' he replied, without looking up.

"'Senor Sebastian,' I continued, 'I regret, in these solitudes, to be obliged to inform you that you are infringing a patent right of mine.'

"'How so?' retorted Senor Sebastian, glancing up from the book, which he now dropped into the pocket of his corduroy coat.

"'In this: I was the originator of fishing on horseback.'

"'Ah!' said the senor, 'you may be the inventor, but I am the improver, see?' And for the first time I noticed that the line was fastened to a hole in the tip of the burro's ear. 'If you have ever observed,' said the fisherman, 'the habits of the burro, or we will say his head, you will have noticed that the ears are always moving back and forth. It's just the motion I want in fishing, so I adopted it, and see—'

"As he spoke the line stiffened out, the burro's ear, or, to be exact, his right ear, bent forward suddenly, and the burro himself awoke with a start.

"'Watch him,' said the fisherman. The burro's eye had first settled on me in an inquiring way, then realizing that something was tugging at his ear, he drew the member up to the horizontal, at which the trout, for such it was, left the water with a bound, and in its return drew the ear down again. The burro now seemed to concentrate all his energies in the contest, and the ear gravitated between the upright and the horizontal. 'You see,' remarked Senor Sebastian again, 'the burro plays the fish, and I,' suiting the action to the word, 'pull him in.' And, with the air of the philosopher he was, the speaker unhooked the trout, dropped it into a pocket of his coat, and having impaled a fresh worm and cast the line, the fisherman felt for his Œdipus, and the burro fell asleep.

"'I deem it,' continued the senor, after relighting his pipe, 'the privilege, if not the duty, of man to take life at the normal angle, or as near it as possible; in other words, take solid comfort. I have seen the hard side of it right in sight of these mountains. I came here forty years ago, when the whole country was a sheep ranch. I walked across the Mojave desert in August, and I see now they find men dead who have tried it. Yes, I was after gold and adventure, and got both.

"'It came about in this way,' and the senor, getting no further bites, rolled up his line and joined me on the trail up the arroyo. 'I was living in Santa Fe in the fifties, trading mostly, and one night a man rushed into the saloon where I was and said a man was dying and wanted to see a priest. I was a Catholic and the next best thing, so I went along. You know where the old palace is to-day in Santa Fe? Well, he took me down a street back of that, and in an old adobe I found a man, a half breed, with death in his face. He had been stabbed in a brawl an hour before, and was so near gone that I didn't have the heart to tell him I was not a priest. He sent the others out of the room, then bade me lock the door, and with his mouth to my ear told me to remember what he said. He had been a bad man, had killed several men, and wanted to do something to expiate his crime, so told his secret to the church. He told me to pull off his belt, which I did, and in it was a row of some of the biggest chunks of gold I ever saw in this country. In another part was an old piece of sheepskin, and on it a map, rude, but good enough, of these very mountains. He said that he and two others had discovered a valuable placer in the mouth of a canyon where you could pick up pieces like those, and confessed that he had killed his partners to get control of it all. The murder was done on the desert at Coyote Springs, and after he had covered the bodies in the sand he started back to the placer. He got there at night. Said he: 'I don't know how it happened, but the next I knew I found myself in a herder's cabin, and he said he found me crazy on the desert. I got better and I never went back to the place, but I want to leave the gold to the church.' I took the map, then wrote down the directions, and to prove his story he told me where he had buried the men, and made me promise to erect a cross over them.

"'Well,' continued the senor, after a short pause, 'the man died, and a few days later I started for the Sierras across the desert. I found the place where the bodies were, as it was near water. I didn't waste much time there, but pushed on, and in three days, as near as I could reckon, was somewhere near the spot. The map called for several mountains to be in a line, then the mouth of a canyon, marked by a big sycamore; and there were other directions. My friend, to make a long story short, I'm hunting that placer yet, and if there is one, from Mojave to Warner's ranch, that I don't know I'd like to see it. That was forty years ago, and I've made up my mind that the man was mad. That he had killed the men there could be little doubt, but the placer must have been in his imagination. But here is my shanty. I'll show you the map.'

"The shanty was a rough board affair set back against the mountain, and so partook of its general color that it might have been passed unnoticed by the stroller up the arroyo had it not been for the score or more of white beehives scattered over the space in front of it, from which rose an ominous humming. The shanty contained but two rooms, one a kitchen, the other a library. The sleeping room was out of doors when it did not rain. The books were few, but to the point, their selection telling of a man of taste; and conspicuously hung on the wall, in an old lookingglass frame, was the gold seeker's map.

"'You can have half the output if you can find the placer,' said the owner of the map.

"The map was on a piece of sheepskin, carefully drawn in what had been red ink, and bore the appearance of having been made in good faith.

"'No, I don't get lonely here,' said the old man in reply to my question; 'there is plenty of company of a decided variety. I generally sleep out yonder in a hammock swung between two trees. I like plenty of air, and one night I awoke, as one will sometimes, feeling that some one is around. I kept perfectly still, and soon heard a step as soft as a cat could make, then another, and then two fiery eyes looked into mine. My rifle was in the house, so I waited. The animal soon turned and walked off, and a few moments later I heard a rush, then a scream in the corral. I ran for my rifle, and got back in time to hear something leap into the bush. I found my burro badly wounded, his side cut and torn, but I believe to this day that he kicked the mountain lion over the fence; he was equal to it. We trailed the lion the next day, but lost it up the canyon.

"'Bears frequently come down and try conclusions with the bees. One night, hearing a loud noise, I went out, rifle in hand, and there stood a big grizzly not ten feet away, in the moonlight, looking twice as big as he was. He had a beehive under one arm, and was brushing bees off with the other. The moment he saw me he began to growl, and I wasted no time, but let him have it just where I thought the heart was. He dropped on all fours and made off, and I fired several times. And to show the tenacity of bear life under difficulties, we found the animal the next day five hundred yards away up the side of the canyon dead, with a ball through his heart. I have known them to go even further with the heart blown to pieces.'

"Senor Sebastian was a type of men who live in the nooks and corners of the great range. There are several living the lives of hermits, some of high education, who have filled places of honor in the world at times. All have a story. Something occurred in their lives to drive them away from their fellow men.

"The abodes of these hermits are becoming known to the public, and modern science and engineering will soon throw open all the nooks and corners of the great range."—N. Y. Sun.

SHARP SENSE.

Quickness of Smell in South American and Frontier Horses.

Most animals have at least one sharp sense. A dog and a cat, according to the fable, lay in a dark room. "Hark! I heard a feather drop," said the dog. "Oh, no," said the cat; "it was a needle. I saw it." Whatever may be true of domesticated horses, the wild horse of the South American pampas possesses a most acute and far-reaching sense of smell.

Mr. Hudson, says Youth's Companion, speaks of it as a common occurrence for the horses of a district, in seasons of drought, to migrate suddenly to some distant place—fifty miles away, perhaps—where rain has fallen. A slight breeze from that quarter is enough to set them off.

A still more striking phenomenon is, he says, familiar to every frontiersman.

The gaucho horse has the greatest terror of an Indian invasion, and long before the marauders reach the settlement—often when they are still a full day's journey from it—all the horses take the alarm, and come flying wildly in. The horned cattle quickly feel the contagion, and a general stampede ensues.

The gauchos declare that the horses smell the Indians, and Mr. Hudson believes they are right. When passing a distant Indian camp, from which the wind blew, all the horses driven before him have taken fright and run away.

He Had It Too.

A drake and a gander met on a narrow path, and neither would give way.

"See here, now!" exclaimed the gander as he puffed out his crop and ruffled his feathers, "but do you know that I am directly descended from the ostrich family?"

"I never heard of it," replied the drake, "but let me give you a pointer. My great-grandfather was an eagle and a high flier!"

"Humph! My great-grandfather could have eaten him at one mouthful! It is a great piece of presumption on your part to block the road!"

"What is an ostrich but a great, overgrown rooster on stilts?"

"And what is an eagle but an old hen too lazy to supply the market with eggs?"

They were having it hot and heavy when the farmer came along and stopped to inquire the cause of the row. When he had heard the particulars he replied:

"It may all be true about your ancestors, but judging you as a drake and a gander I find you of so little benefit that I shall eat you both to commemorate the discovery that I am descended from a king!"—N. Y. Recorder.

—"I see by the paper," said Mrs. Hicks, "that you can buy a sealskin from the Esquimaux for two iron hoops and a tenpenny nail." "Very true," returned Hicks. "But I can't spare the time to take the hoops and the nail to the Esquimaux, and my bank wouldn't honor a check for two hoops and a tenpenny nail, so I don't see how we are benefited by that state of affairs."

IN THE KENTUCKY MOUNTAINS.

A Native Who Lost His Fortune and Found Another Unexpectedly.

I had a glimpse of life in the Kentucky mountains the other day that I will not soon forget, said a capitalist. I made a trip into that section as the representative of a syndicate to look at some coal lands. I went as far as I could by rail, and then took a horse and rode into the wilderness. Toward night I brought up at a little cabin, of which I had been previously informed, and made arrangements to spend the night there. This cabin was about twenty feet long by about twelve feet wide. On the ground floor it was all one room. Above was a loft, to which access was gained by means of a ladder and a hole in the floor. There was a little corn growing around the place, and there were two hogs. In the rear of the cabin was a low shed, open at one end and with a slanting roof. It was just big enough to hold a cow at night. The cow, which was a lean, woe-begone animal, the two hogs and the corn constituted apparently the entire assets of the place.

In this establishment were living a man and his wife and eight children, the oldest being twelve years. They lived on corn meal and milk, with occasionally some pork. Both the man and the woman were barefooted. The elder children had clothes enough to cover their nakedness, and the younger were not so fortunate. The man seemed to be a slow, dull sort of fellow, who had lived in destitution so long that he had become used to it. The woman was different. Her face wore an expression of abject despair. If a painter had wanted a model for a picture entitled "Hopelessness" he need have gone no further. After supper the man went out to feed the hogs and the cow and do other "chores."

I talked to the woman for about an hour, and succeeded with great difficulty in getting her story. Her pride stood in the way of her telling me anything for a long time. During all the time in which she talked the expression of dull listlessness, to which her face had become habituated, never left it but once. Then a look of something like happiness came over her features. This was when she said that they had not always been poor. "We weren't always this way," she said. "We were well off once. We saved enough, him and me, so that we were rich. We had twenty-seven dollars laid away once." That was her idea of wealth. Twenty-seven dollars! She went on to say that the children had come fast, that a cow had to be bought and that she cost eighteen dollars. The children had fallen sick, and the doctor had to be brought in from civilization, and he cost five dollars, and so it went until their fortune had gone, and they had nothing left of that magnificent twenty-seven dollars.

The next morning I paid them my lodging. I had slept in the loft, and the family had slept in the room below. None of them took off their clothes. I had brought with me a huge lot of roast beef sandwiches, and ate these for my supper and breakfast, for I had been warned that I probably could not get anything to eat there. Before leaving I took twenty-seven dollars, and wrapping it up in a newspaper, left it on the table in the middle of the room. Then I rode away, feeling vastly pleased with myself, and knowing that there was one mountaineer's family in Kentunky that had recovered its lost fortune.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

HE DIDN'T COME BACK.

The Little Girl Thought She Had Found Her Brother at the Railroad Station.

As the train from Kansas City came into the Union depot the other evening a fashionably dressed gentleman and lady stood just outside the gate, evidently waiting for a friend to come off the train. Between them, and holding the hand of each, stood a little girl not over five years old.

"Mamma, is brother coming this time?" she asked with the eagerness of a sudden inspiration.

The mother shook her head sadly, then glanced into her husband's eyes.

In an instant more the child dropped the hands which she was holding and darted through the gate before her parents or the gateman could stop her. When the former reached her she had thrown her arms around the neck of a manly little fellow about a head taller than herself, and was sobbing:

"O, Brother, did you come back? Mamma didn't 'spect you 'tall. I'll just 'sprise her."

Meantime the little fellow struggled to free himself from her embrace and protested:

"Le' go! I ain't your brother. I don't know you an' I don't want to be hugged."

"Yes, you be Brother. I'm Tootsey an' you do knows me," insisted the little girl, and her small arms refused to be shaken from their grasp about his neck.

Through their tears her parents explained to the father and mother of the little boy that a few months before they had lost a child closely resembling the boy whom "Tootsey" had mistaken for her brother, and had explained to her that "brother had gone away." As the children were forcibly separated the grief of the little girl drew tears from all who crowded about the weeping group.

"Won't he never, never come back, mamma?" were the last words heard by the bystanders as the father carried her up the central stairway in his arms.—Chicago Tribune.

The Stinging Tree.

The stinging tree of Queensland, Australia, is a luxurious shrub, pleasing to the eye, but dangerous to the touch. It grows from two to three inches to ten or fifteen feet in height and emits a disagreeable odor. A traveler says: "Sometimes while shooting turkey in the shrubs I entirely forgot the stinging tree till I was warned of its close proximity by its smell, and have often found myself in a little forest of them. I was only once stung and that very lightly. Its effects are curious. It leaves no mark, but the pain is maddening, and for months afterward the part, when touched, is tender in rainy weather or when it gets wet in washing, etc. I have seen a man who treats ordinary pain lightly roll on the ground in agony after being stung, and I have known a horse so completely mad after getting into a grove of the trees that he rushed open-mouthed at every one who approached him and had to be shot. Dogs when stung will rush about whining piteously biting pieces from the affected part."—Brooklyn Eagle.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Paint and Feathers.

Dr. S. H. Mitchell, of St. Paul Park, was made the victim of an outrage which has scandalized that charming little suburb. He was dragged from his hotel, badly kicked and beaten and covered with red paint and feathers by a gang of whitecaps. He is in a precarious condition, three of his ribs being broken, and he may die from the effects of his injuries. Six of his assailants were arrested by Sheriff Marty, of Washington county, but on a preliminary examination five were released, and John Newburg, who was identified by Dr. Mitchell as one of the assailants, was held to the grand jury in $200 bonds. The others arrested, who were released, are John, Henry and Charles Newburg, sons of the man who was held, all under 16 years of age; Aaron Newburg, his brother; John McCarthy, a brother-in-law; Albert Fielding and Louis Moore.

The enemies of Dr. Mitchell charge him with creating discord in the family of John Newburg, whose wife was under his care.

The New Capitol.

The capitol commission held a long meeting in the governor's office for the purpose of defining the specifications for the new building. The following architects were present to assist the commision in its labors: Cass Gilbert, C. H. Johnstone, A. C. Gauger, J. W. Stevens, St. Paul, and F. B. Long, W. C. Whitney and H. W. Jones, Minneapolis.

The entire day was spent in discussing plans and the requirements of the legislative act of 1893.

The most minute details of every part of the new capitol's construction were taken up and considered systematically. This is to enable the commissioners to intelligently prepare the specifications which are to be given out to the architects.

They Use Dynamite.

Ever since the Mesaba range was settled, dynamiting for fish in the lakes of the range has been carried on almost unceasingly during the summer months. This spring the dynamiters have been more persistant than ever. As a result there is hardly any fish left in any of the lakes. Lake Embarass is almost entirely cleaned out. The high water of this year allowed large numbers of fish to come up the lakes from the St. Louis river, but already this stock has been dynamited to death.

Killed.

Anthony Francois, the 3-year-old son of J. M. Francois, of 422 Blrir street, was run over and killed by a Merriam Park electric car on Prior avenue near Oakley. The child's head was almost severed from the body and the limbs were frightfully mangled. The motorman, William Lord, was arrested by the Prior avenue police detail, but was subsequently released upon the authority of Coroner Whitcomb, who decided that the blame of the affair could not be assigned to anyone.

Cash Left Over.

The World's fair commission wound up its accounts and turning $15,000 back into the state treasury, in addition to which exhibits and other property valued at $36,000 have been returned to the state, making the net cost of the Minnesota exhibit $99,000. The Great Northern road was allowed $1,240 for work done in the agricultural department. The commission did not formally dissolve, but it is not expected that another meeting will be held.

His son, with whom he had been living, had deserted him and left him alone to die, miles away from any human habitation.

The safe in J. H. Roach's saloon, Mankato, was tapped and $175 secured.

Ex-Alderman Charles C. Hashow, of Minneapolis, was drowned in White Bear lake, about 50 yards off Dellwood's shore. The drowning was the result of the carelessness of Hashow and a party of three friends in changing places in the boat, which caused it to capsize. It was a miracle that more were not drowned.

MRS. L. F. COATES.

Three years ago, I was so sick I could not eat, sleep or walk, for I coughed all day and night, my weight was reduced from 150 to 127 pounds. The offensive matter expectorated grew less every day and when I had taken the whole of one bottle I could sleep all night without coughing, and have been well ever since and weigh 178 pounds.

DELANO DIARY

—Subscribe and advertise in the Buffalo Gazette.

—A dwelling house and garden spot on S. Third street for rent. Apply to Mrs. M. A. Chance.

—Len Dedrick unloaded three cars of brick Monday morning for veneering his saloon building.

—The St. Anthony Benevolent Society of the village of Delano have an advertisement in yesterday's Eagle for a grand 4th of July celebration.

—Reports say that one saloon will close when the year is out, and that another will open up. Hard times don't seem to effect that businees as much as it does others:

For liquor, though hard are the times,
Men continue to spend their dimes.

—On Friday night, June 1, at about 11:30 the fire bell was rung by Roy Wilber, who had discovered a fire in the basement of the Public School building near his home. The citizens turned out till hundreds were watching the flames shoot out from the top of the building and from the windows, and the sparks and brands carried by the heat to a great hight and then gently droped on the neighboring buildings or yards; luckily there was no wind and the burning brands quickly went out in the grass covered with dew, or were extinguished by watchers guarding property. The fine school house, the pride of the village, was in two hours a smouldering ruin. Nothing was saved; text books, library, charts, maps, globes, laboratory, organ, and appliances were consumed. Many of the children mourn for their work of the long term which was to close in one short week; keepsakes, drawings, maps and such work as they had on paper being swept away in a few minutes. Many of the stone used for water tables and window sills exploded with reports like musketry, and small pieces were hurled with considerable force into the street. Next winter's wood piled on the school ground was nearly all consumed. The fire engine was out of repairs any failed to respond in the time of greatest need, after a long delay Dad Gast's engine house fired up and a hose was attacbed and some water thrown onto the wood, when the hose burst, ending the water buisness. Had the proposed new water-works been in working order it might have, properly handled, payed for its self by saving the building. A notice was promptly posted on Saturday morning for the scholars of the primary and intermediate departments to meet at the City Hall; those of the High school department at the Council room and those of the Grammar Dept. in the M. E. Church on Monday morning prepared for examinations. The school building was insured for $8,000.00 and the contents for $1,200.00 which will furnish quite a starter for a new structer which the board commenced Saturday morning to discuss. A new building should be carefully planned and modern improvements made, where they are better than the old, plenty of air space, should be obtained in each school room by haying the ceilings high enough. The old system of depending on the hot air furnaces for heat and ventilation will probably now be abandoned, and hot water or steam used for heating and windows so arrainged that they can be easily handled when necessary to use them for ventilation purposes. The insurance is sufficient to build a pretty good house, these times and with the addition of a small sum the school should be in runing order next fall. It has to be rebuilt and there is no need of dilly-dallying and see-sawing all sumer about it. But the plans should be secured and every thing put in motion as soon as possible to build a nicer and more convenient house for the present needs of the school.

—Since reading the Minneapolis papers for the past week many Delano people have become satisfied that river water is not what they want for drinking purposes.

—Today closes the term of school for the summer. It is hoped to have a new school-house in the place of the one recently burned, to open the next term in time this fall.

—The architect with his plans for the new power house for the village was in town Monday. It looks as if our council were paying out considerable getting ready to do something.

—Superintendent Lindsley delivered the baccalaureate address at the City Hall last evening. People didn't turn out like they should to the first occasion of the kind occurring in our village.

—Joseph Bauman has begun work on the foundation for a new residence on Second Street, south of G. W. Bolton's residence. We are not advised as to whether Joe will live there with his sistors or with some other fellows sister.

—The free-text books have been scattered to the winds. John Rader says he was surprised on Saturday morning to find big chunks of cbarred paper in his fields, and was at a loss to know where it came from until he heard of the Delano School fire.

—The "Box of Monkeys" played at the City Hall on Wednesday to a small sized audiance. Some how people don't come out to hear home talent as well as they do the imported article, even though the entertainment, rendered by the school scholar, is superior.

—On Tuesday morning our town pump was patronized by a prancing pacer from Howard Lake. Johnston lets his horse quench his thirst in Delano, but as for himself he goes through dry. He tells us if there was money enough to make it go the Farmer's Union would be a fine thing.

—Tim Gleeson pump repairer, on the G. N., confirms the statements of the Minneapolis papers in saying that the water is unfit for drinking purposes in that city's water works. He is frequently called upon to repair water pipes, and finds them blocked with small fish and other inhabitants of rivers.

—Quite a number of farmers have been in during the past week to inspect our samples of binding twine; so much for advertisiing; and farmers are enabled to save money oftentimes by reading of bargains in their home papers, which usually work for their interests. We have a few samples left; of twine and of GAZETTES.

BUFFALO GAZETTE $1.00.

—This evening (Friday) will occur at the City Hall the commencement exercises of the Graduating class of the High School. The class consists of Emery Cunningham, Edward Freeman, Roy Wilder, and Vernon Wilder.

All are cordially invited to be present. Admission is free. A few seats are reserved for the relatives of the graduates.

—The Delano Epworth League visited the League at the Rader school house on Sunday evening; some members of the Armstrong League were also in attendance. A good meeting was held, and invitations were extended to each to visit the other leagues. It is expected that Delano will receive both the others soon, a special programme being arranged for the occasion; all three leagues participating in the exercises. Montrose and other neighbors may attend at the same time.

—We were absent from home in the country, on Wednesday evening and missed attending the "Box of Monkeys" given to defray the expenses of the graduating ceremonies. From neighbor Buckley's last week's unfriendly comments there would be nothing strange about that, but we have been told that this lover of the beautiful, this admirer of poseys and student of music and kindred things was not there! and further more that, with one single exeeption the body of men whom he was trying to court favor with by abusing us were conspicuous for their absence. Of course that gentleman, who tries to make believe he is so generous will send around the price of a ticket to help out the boys or in future keep his mouth shut for the small sum of 15 cts.

—The signatures of some of Delano's wealthiest citizens remains on the bonds of some of Delano's saloon keepers, while they assist in in various ways to violate the contracts for which they are bondsmen. The Sunday clause, the night closing clause, the games of chance clause and the selling to minors and to old drunkards clauses are openly, and often violated. It seems strange that business men would affix their signatures to bonds for contracts with the city to keep these laws while selling intoxicating liquors and then go themselves and assist the prinpals of the contract in breaking them; defying the authorities; setting at naught the laws, and aiding by example in teaching anarchy as well as other evils to the rising generation.

T. K. Danforth and wife, of Minneapolis visited Delano this week.

Adolph Schmidt, of Long Lake, visited Cornicts at Montrose, Sunday.

Dan Conroy, of Minneapolis, came up yesterday to visit with Delano friends.

Mrs. Peters and Fred, and Miss Vinnie Chance came home from Elbow Lake Tuesday.

Henry Invie, of Hanover, was a Delano visitor on Saturday. Henry is holding his age well

Mrs. William Ziebarth, who has been suffering with Sciatica is improving an now able to sit up.

Owen to non-fusion principles, the Populists candidate for Governor is the strongest man they have.

Patrick Casey, of Cochran town, is stopping at the Danforth house for a few days, under the doctors care.

Dr. Chilton, and J. J. Wooley, of Howard Lake were passengers for Howard on yesterday morning's train.

The boys tell a good one on Peter Klick they say he came to the school house fire Friday night with a lantern.

Mrs. A. D. Smith and family, of Nebraska arrived Tuesday to spend the summer with her parents Mr. and Mrs. John Cunningham.

Eddie Erickson took a tumble to himself and covered himself with water while carrying a pail full down the hill opposite the school fire.

Hon. C. G. Halgren, and Dr. Shrader, of Watertown drove over Saturday, Charley seems to be springing out well, notwithstanding the hard times. He says "I don't worry; I let the democrats do that!"

Otis L. Billings, on his return from attendance at court at Buffalo, called on us Tuesday. He says he likes his new home, Minneapolis, and expects to be be elected Justice of the peace at the next election.

Prof. Willis E. Johnson and family came home on Tuesday from St. Cloud, where Willis graduated at the Normal School. His name has been mentioned among the possibilities as a candidate for Superintendent of schools.

County Cullings.

Johnsoh Mealy is working hard at establishing his hobby, a farmers union, without politics but with an eye to business from the financial standpoint.

Don't forget the camp meeting at Montrose, It begins next Thursday, June 14, Dr. Chaffee will be present. A large crowd, doubtless, will attend on Sunday.

County Superintendent Lindsley has sent out circulars to those likely to attend the summer school at Buffalo. Every effort is being made to make this a desirable and useful term to attend.

J. J. Woolley seems not thougherly, to have made up his mind as to whether he will accept the nomination of Judge of Probate or County Attorney. He will doubtless be satisfied with the decission of his friends.

District Court is in session this week and seems likely to continue for several weeks. Judge Elliot appears to be quite a young man for the position but strikes one as knowing what he is about and destined to become a leader in the business.

The Cokato Commoner had an article a few weeks ago from lovers of American Liberty" of Dassel. From the tone of the communication it would have been more appropriate to have signed. "Lovers of that which intoxicates."

The Cokato Commoner says, "Frank Swanson is favorably mentioned by many of his friends as a candidate for County Auditor. Frank would make a good auditor." The same paper favors keeping Ole Mattson in his present position rather than elevate him to the Treasuryship.

We are in receipt of an announcement of the Annandale Camp Meeting Association, which will be held from June 20 to 27. Annandale is a beautiful little village near a nice lake and a pleasant time can be had besides enjoying the religious services. Rev. Chaffee, D. D. is Superintendent.

The Republican Congressional convention is called to meet at Brainerd, Aug 28. Wright has 24 delegates; more than any other county save St. Louis which has 53 and figures on having a Duluth man for Congress, even if they act on neighbor Eaton's advice to his constituents and elect a Democrat. 20 counties are represented by 205 delegates.

A meeting of the Orienatals was held at Buffalo on Tuesday evening. Members come pouring into town from every direction and a big turnout was on hand. The boys say they did have fun mitiating the county officers; and were especially well pleased with the way Col. O'Leary rode the goat. David Cochran is said to have been too big a man for them and when he informed the boys that he stood on his rights as an American citizen that closed the proceedings with the Judge but half-baked.

James Nugent was taken to Stillwater on Wednesday where he is to make his home for the balance of his life. We don't know where he got the liquor that fired his brain to the fearful act of shooting his daughter just ripening into womanhood. But for years he has been a drunkard to whom it is against the law to sell or give intoxicating liquors and yet he got them and we have not heard of anybody having been prosecuted for furnishing them to him. If the person that furnished him that last dreadful dose don't see ghosts it must be be cause there are none. His punishment during his natural life must be terrible.

Some Democrats seem disposed to wait until the conventions of other parties are held an then piece out a ticket to win the offices left for them to win by nominating such men to run, as are most likely, regardless of their fitness for the positions, to beat their opponents in the race. This is one kind of politics; but a better kind is to have principles on which to found a party then nominate the best men that the party can furnish for every position, from first to last, regardless of other parties; when if the party principles are what they should be "Equal rights to all, and special privileges to none," that being what people want in this country, the ticket must be a winning one in the race.

Dr. Chilton, of Howard Lake, is mentioned as a probable candidate for the legislature this fall. The doctor would diagnose the troubles with some of our laws and do a good deal more toward curing their defects than many of the lawyers, bankers and other monied men that are sent to the legislature We don't like his politics exactly but think he would help to make good laws for Minnesota as any Republican that Wright county can furnish. Our state laws have been kind of laughing stock for people generally for a few years back, and many haye even been declared unconstitutional. The doctor is good on constitutional treatment. Perhaps he will not stand much show of a nomination among the "manipulators" but if the rank and file get out to caucuses as they should, he may get it. He has a mind of his own and may not care to be tied up to vote for Washburn or any body else; but some good laws for Minnesota is what is needed now.

Democrats appear to be very quiet just about now, in the county, Considerable grumbling is being done at the dilatory movements in Congress, and falt is found with home management. It was ever thus: but don't you be fooled; turn out to every caucus of the party of your choice called in your precinct and vote for the most honest and capable man your community furnishes, for delegate to attend the conventions called, go yourself if you can't do better. Give a day of your valuable time to the selecting of compitent honest men to be placed on our ticket from top to bottom; no trading stock; and see what a difference it will make. Don't listen to any adjurnments, postponements, fusions or other fool notions: go to the convention as Democrats, act like Democrats, mominate democrats, thengo home and work for it, and with it until election day. Disaffaction in our ranks is not greater than it is in the republican ranks of this District and County.

THAT TIRED FEELING.

I'm tired of infant prodigies,
Now, tell me, are not you?
I'm tired of weather prophecies
That always miss their cue.
I'm tired of buying goods marked down,
Way down their cost below;
Of building lots outskirting town
That double value so.

I'm tired of ladies who remain
Unmated from sheer choice;
Of maids who sing, yet plead and fein
To have indeed no voice;
Of girls who never novels buy,
So classical are they;
Of youth just home from college high,
Who knows it all—his way.

I'm tired (oh, have you never been?)
Of folk's reminding me
There shoes are one size larger than
They really ought to be;
Of would be poets seeking fame
By harping "gentle spring."
Upon this list stands first the name
Attached to this crude fling.

I'm tired of seeing ballet twirls
By girls whose sons can vote;
Of seeing fluffy, golden curls
That peroxide denote;
Of clerks who know before I ask
The very thing I want;
Of would be friends who 'neath the mask
Of bluntness hurl the taunt

I'm tired of fatal accident
By gun unloaded quite;
Of tonic, "surely heaven sent,"
That puts all ills to flight;
Of drivers and of motormen
Who never look my way;
Of him who borrows just a ten
And quite forgets to pay.

I'm tired of hearing old folks prate
O'er days perfection fraught;
Of never hearing, lose or take,
Of raffle tickets bought;
Of all these things and many more
I'm tired as tired can be,
And as all rhymsters are a bore
I know you're tired of me.

Englishmen after America.

Over a century ago Englishmen taxed our people until they would bear it no longer, but revolted and refused to submit to unjust taxes; or taxes without representation in the Parliment of the Mother Country. The Revolutionary war was the outcome of this resistance of English oppression of her colony. In the trial of arms the Americans proved too much for England and after seven years struggle gained her independence. Since that time, with a few little misunderstandings, peace has prevailed between the two countries.

But since the British lion has seen fit to let us alone, the English people have individually, and by colonies undertaken to do that, which their government failed to do, get possession of our country. And from present appearances, success in a measure, is crowning their efforts. We read of a wealthy Englishman here, and there, over our western prairies, with his pack of hounds, enjoying life in his own way while looking after "pater familius'" interest in a few sections of American soil. We read of bankers whose wealth is English; insurance companies whose receipts go to swell the Englishman's pocketbook; Millwaukee and other large breweries as being the property of the Britishers; Minneapolis flouring mills as having passed into the hands of English companies; and Andrew Carnigie, of Cluny Castle, and of Homestead riot fame, not content with his possessions in Pennsylvania where that state was put to a large expense and trouble on account of his strikes and riots, is reported to have purchased an interest in the Oliver iron mines in our own state. And latest we are told that for $7,000,000 of British gold the Elgin watch works of Illinois, have passed into the hands of an English syndicate. Why is this? What can be wrong with our financial system? Is there not some fault with our mode of doing business? For years we have lived under a protective tariff system. Our goods have been sold at ficticious prices. This country has had to pay more for goods made at home than foreigners could buy the same American manufacturers for in their lands, our protection has been screwed up and up, and now the McKinley bill caps the climax, and British gold is taking possession of our most paying business.

With flour ground in English mills; beer brewed in English breweries; time kept by English watches, and our naval vessels covered with defective armor plate turned out by the Queen's own subject, our wild game run down by English hounds how much more will it take to completely subject our proud nation to the galling yoke of foreign capital? Will not money have secured what force of arms failed to do? And yet our protective friends circulate pictures of America's proud flag and England's ensign and ask the question "which flag are you for?" And try to make voters believe that unless they keep up protection on American goods, which benefits only wealthy manufacturers, many of the wealthiest of whom, as we have already shown, live in the Queen's Domains, our country will be under the English flag! Is it not getting under that flag more and more every year, under the present policy? Do not the best people in England know the value of free trade, so called, and do they not continue to advise us to follow in their steps in this line, while the moneyed men send their hoarded gains here and get control of our industries, and help grind down labor to the lowest notch? Would not our country thrive better if run under the plan nature gave us? Would not our citizens live better and more contented if they could see the broad ocean dotted with vessels carrying the products of our country from our shores and landing many luxuries and things going to make life pleasant in their place? Would not this bring about closer union between nations separated by the barriers God, in his infinite wisdom placed between them and which are sufficient? Would it not tend to a higher state of civilization of the entire world? And would not our own citizens be able to hold on to their own industries and compete with the world instead of surrendering them, like the fortifications in a great battle, one after another to the very individuals our protectionist friends try to make us beleye we should shun like so much poison? Let us try it. Let us support those who favor a reformation in financial and commercial affairs.

I. D. VISITED the State prison at Stillwater on Memorial Day and entertained the inmates with one of his humorous lectures. The Prison Mirror in speaking of the occasion says: "Mr. Donnelly with much animation and phylosophy, among other good things refered to Mr. S. M. Owens as the next Governor of Minnesota, which sentiment was received with warm acclamation, when Jim Casey, just coming around the summer house overhearing the remark, suddenly lost all interest in the game of leap frog, and rushing forward cried out in a loud voice to his compannions; "Jazus Kripes, boys, come on! He's tellin' more funny stories ag'in!" Does the Sage expect Owens to get a majority of inmates?

THE littleness of politics is shown by an article in the Minneapolis Journal where it says because some of the Minneapolis delegates are opposed to Hicks they will support a man from the country, and "This would probably not be the case if H. C. Belden, W. E. Hale or some lawyer of equal ability and as high standing at the bar could be prevailed upon to go into the convention and contest the nomination with Hicks." Are we to haye a judge because it will spite some of the city folks, or because he is qualified? Mr. Latham lives in a temperance town where people are supposed to have no standing at the bar,—the political bar.

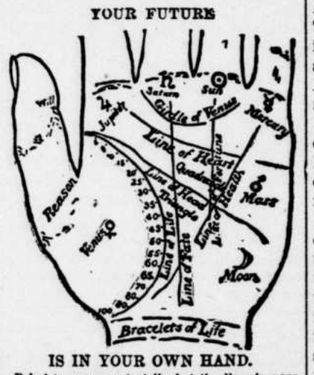
YOUR FUTURE



IS IN YOUR OWN HAND.

Palmistry assumes to tell what the lines in your hand indicate. It will amuse you, if nothing more. The above diagram almost explains itself. The length of the LINE OF LIFE indicates probable age to which you will live. Each BRACELET gives you thirty years. Well-marked LINE OF HEAD denotes brain power; clear LINE OF FORTUNE, fame or riches. Both combined mean success in life; but you must keep up with modern ideas to win it. You will find plenty of these in Demorest's Family Magazine, so attractively presented that every member of the family is entertained. It is a dozen magazines in one. A CLEAR LINE OF HEART bespeaks tenderness; a straight LINE OF FATE, peaceful life; the reverse if crooked. A well-defined LINE OF HEALTH spares you doctors' bills; so will the health hints in Demorest's. No other magazine publishes so many stories to interest the home circle. You will be subject to extremes of high spirits or despondency if you have the GIRDLE OF VENUS well marked; keep up your spirits by having Demorest's Magazine to read. By subscribing to it for 1894 you will receive a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides the superb premium picture, 17x22 inches, "I'm a Daisy!" which is almost a real baby, and equal to the original oil painting which cost $300; and you will have a magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep you posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads, and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and you get with it, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2.00, and you will really get over $25.00 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send for a specimen copy. A large QUADRANGLE means honesty; a large TRIANGLE, generosity; long FIRST DIVISION OF THUMB, strong will; LONG SECOND DIVISION, reasoning faculty. The MOUNT OF JUPITER betokens ambition; that of SATURN, prudence; the SUN, love of splendor; MARS, courage; MOON, imagination; VENUS, love of pleasure; and MERCURY, intelligence. Take our advice as above and you will be sure to possess the last and most valuable quality,

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 8, 1894

President Cleveland told a democrat member of the House who asked him the opinion of the Senate amendments to the tariff bill that his opinion on the questson of tarriff reform should be well enough known without any additional expression at this time, and intimated that he cousidered prompt action upon the subject by both House and Senate of far more importance to the country than the mere details of this or than schedule in the bill, provided, of course, that the bill as a whole is kept in line with democratic promises of the tariff reform. That strikes me as the proper position for every patriotic democrat to take at this times.

The republican Senators are acting on the old legal maxim—"when you have no case abuse the opposition." Finding that they were defeated on the sugar schedule of the tariff bill, which they had been for weeks claming to be confident of defeating with the aid of democrtaic votes, they have resorted to the cry of "sugar trust" thinking to blind the country to the fact that the sugar schedule this week adopted by the democratic Senators only gives the sugar refiners about half of what they are getting under the Mc Kinlev law. Senator Jones is confident that all of the amendments will be adopted and the tariff bill passed by the close of next week, and republican Senators privately admit as much.

The Southern democrats in the House were doubly disappointed by the defeat of the bill for the repeal of the tax on State bank currency. They had confidently expected 140 votes in favor of the bill, but it only received 102, while the opposition mustered 170. They claim that men who had allowed themselves to be counted in favor of the bill voted against it.

Secretary Carlisle waited until the fake story that he was preparing for another issue of bonds had advanced to the stage os pretending to give all the details down to the exact amount of bonds to be issued, before he took the trouble to undo the work of the gifted writers of Washington fairy tales by officially anouncing that he was not preparing to issue bonds, had not considered it even, and knew no reason why he should consider it at this time or in the immedate future. Secretary Carlisle has been during his entire public life known as a man who believes in the open and above board method of doing things, and the public may rest assured that should the necessity for another issue of bonds arise it will be duly and officially announced by the Treasury department and not by fake newspapers. It is not believed that it will be necessary to issue more bonds, as there is no probability of the cash in the treasury reaching an embarrassingly low condition before August, and by that time the increase in the Government receipts under the new tariff law will probably be great enough to furnish relief.

The claim for $15,000,000 against the estate of late Senator Stanford, which was filed in California this week by direction of Attorney-General Olney, has been much talked about in Washington. The claim is made to protect the interest of the Government involved in the indebtedness of the Central Pacific Rrilroad to the United States. This step is in line with a resolution introduced in the House sometime ago by Representative Boatner, of Louisiana, providing for the employment ot counsel to bring suits against the orginal Central Pacific syndicate, composed of Huntington, Stanford, Hopkins, Crocker and Colton for money dirverted by them for teeir own benefit from the ernings of the railroad. Mr. Boatner claims that the Government can get at least $40,000,000 by bringing these suits. The bonds upon which the railroad owes the Government the money is not yet due but the claim is put in now so thrt the statute of limitation cannot be pleaded should the suits be entered after default in the payment of the bonds. It is expected that this Congress will legislate upon the indebtedness of all of the Pacific railroads to the government, and C. P. Huntington is now in Washington looking out for his end of the matter.

Nothing startling has been brought out this week by the Senate committee that is investigating the charges concerning the alleged sugar trust scandal.

The more testimony the committee that is investigating the charge concerning the alleged sugar trust scandal. The more testimony the committee takes the more apparent it becomes that these charges were based upon the flimsiest of foundations, helped out by conjecture and partisan politics.

The Senate will have a select committee of five to give hearings to the representatives of all the "industrial armies" and other cranks who haye wild schemes to air, a resolution to that effect having this week been adopted.

HIGH SCHOOL ORATION.

The Press—Its Uses and Abuses.

(BY VERNON WILDER.)

The importance of the power wielded by the newspapers of the world, more particularly, the Englisn speaking world, cannot be overestimated. From its beginning with the Public Intelligencer in England in the year 1863, the power of the newspaper has been growing and becomming greater until now it rules the world, for it has been truly said, "the lever that moves the world of mind is the printing press." By that wonderful invention of the 19th century, the telegraph, the newspapers of to-day are enabled to give to their readers almost as soon as they happen, all the great events in the worlds history; by the perfection of the art of rapid and cheap printing, the newspaper is placed within the reach of all, and its circulation has become almost universal—in fact, it is estimated that in America the newspapers forms 89 per cent of the literature of the people. And to a great extent, the opinion of the people are moulded by the editorial utterances of the newspapers they that read, so that the great influence of the press is self evident.

But how are the newspapers using their influence? Do they maintain the high standard which as leaders of public opinion they should maintain? Most assuredly, they do not. The time honored practice of leader writing has nearly gone out of existence. Instead of editorials giving the opinion of the intellectual head of the paper on the questions of the day we are entertained by praises of the party with which the paper allies itself and predictions of the speedy down fall of the opposing one, or, in election times, we are told of the virtues of one candidate and the vices of his oponent, or else the voters of the country are warned by the republican papers that unless they vote for the Republican candidates from president down to alderman the country will go to rack and ruin, while the democratic papers say that the only salvation lies in voting the democratic ticket. In the absence of these themes, the editorial columns are filled with monotonous strain of some would-be humorist.

In the newspaper of todav individuality is absent. The editorial page no longer represents the opinions of one man of power, but is composed of the writings of several hired leader writers who grind out editorials at so much per column. Well defined principles are no longer advocated, but, on the contrary, the policy which is the best in business way is the one which the paper pursues. There is even now a practice of selling space in the editorial columns to whoever wishes to buy, and of publishing paid reading matter disguised as editorial utterances,—such a practice is truly disgraceful and unworthy of the present time. There was once a time when the name of the paper was synonomous with that of its editor—he who spoke of the N. Y. Tribune spoke of Horace Greeley—but now nearly all the great dailies are controlled by corporations and individuality is lost. This is, no doubt, one of the reasons why the daily papers are so prone to side with the moneyed man; take for instance, the strike on the G. N. R'y. a few weeks ago, I may be mistaken but to the best of my belief not a paper in the Twin Cities upheld the cause of the strikers, but on the contrary, all did everything in their power to create a mistaken idea concerning the strike, saying that the men had no grievance, that they had given no warning of the strike, and so on.

This, then, is the way they lead public opinion. Let us see how they publish the news. In this the aim of all the dailies is, first and foremost, sensationalism. It is said that the editorial estimate of the importance of an item is shown by the depth of the headline. The really serious happenings of the day are not recorded, but only sensations and catastrophes. On this subject it has been said that a most appropriate name for a daily newspaper as it is now would be "The Daily Crimes", and it is this tendency toward sensationalism which leads the same writer to define news as "any heretofore unprinted occurance which involves the violation of any of the Ten Commandments.

The person who thinks that the daily newspaper presents the history of the day preceding is very much mistaken.

But what are the uses of a newspaper? Its two principal functions are to give the news, and, through its editorial columns, to act as a leader of public opinion.

In collecting the news, accuracy of statement should be the first consideration, and the news thus collected should be arranged according to real rather than sensational values; that is, the proceedings of Congress should not be put in small type on the third page, while the account of the last prize fight occupies the major part of the first; of course, a newspaper must publish the accounts of the prize fights—the refined tastes of the present day demand it—but there is no need of devoting all of two or three pages to such an accoant to the exclusion of much more important matter. Anything which it would not benefit the people-at-large to know should be cut out or at least minimized to the utmost, and anything which tends to corrupt the tastes of the public and lower the popular standard of morality should be religiously excluded.

In its comment on the happenings of the day through the editorial columns, the newspapers should aim at perfect fairness and honesty, and stand for well-defined principles. The editorial page should not be subordinated to the counting-room. Brains and not money should control it. William Morton Plaine suggests that a portion of the editorial page be devoted to the school system of the country. As it is all the mention the public school receives in the papers of to-day is an announcement of its opening and closing and a report or two of board meetings, which when the importance of the school system is considered, is ridiculously inadequate.

No doubt it will be said that this is a rarher pessimistic view of the case, but any careful reader of the papers will fully concur in what I have said.

But the newspapers are not wholly to blame, the people whose morbid sensibilities demand the crimes, catastrophes, and other sensational news of the day, are to blame for the manner in which the news is printed and for the deterioration of the editorial page, for what is the use of printing editorials, and subordinating sensational values to real, for the few, when the many are clamoring for the daily crimes. How much of a circulation would a paper have which gave no account of the robberies, hangings, and murders which are continually happening? Its sale would not pay the cost of the paper on which it was printed, and yet it must be admitted that these are not at all necessary to the welfare of the readers of a paper. So as long as the public demands it, the motto of the editor will have to be "give the people what they want and that the worst of it."

Binding Twine.

Henry Wolfer, warden of the penitentiary, at Stillwater has sent out a lot of samples of the prison made binding twine. The twine is of hemp, grown in Minnesota, Iowa and Kentucky, mostly. Mr. Wolfer says:

"This twine will be sold the present season at a price not to exceed 7 cents per pound, and lower, if necessary, to meet competition of any twine of any length and quality that may be placed on the market, said price to be finally determined by the Board of Managers June 1, 1894. All the purchasers of twine previous to that date will be entitled to the benefit of any reductions below seven cents that may be made by the Board. There need, therefor, be no hesitancy in placing orders now, as the prices will be adjusted as above indicated." Farmers who will need twine this fall, if they like the twine, will do well to place their orders in time. Call and get a sample at the GAZETTE office. We haye a full ball for examination. 26tf

MASKED robbers attacked a female photographer in an Indiana town and nearly killed her when they asked for her money and she replied in the negative.

MONEY continues to accumulate in the Bank of England. This statement will enlighten many people who have been wondering for a long time where it has all gone.

IDLENESS leads to crime. More than four-fifths of the murders of the United States last year were committed by men who had no regular occupations, and a large proportion of the remaining one-fifth by those who were unable to obtain employment.

THERE is no worse criminal than the train-wrecker. He is a most cold-blooded murderer at heart. He doesn't care whom he kills. The man who for some personal spite at a railroad official proceeds to wreck a train richly deserves any punishment the law can enforce.

AND now we are promised an improvement in the telephone which will enable one to see the person speaking. It will be some satisfaction to see what kind of a looking person the telephone girl is who persists in answering "line busy," no matter how urgent your business.

THAT Long Island farmer who put up a sign calling for 2,000 tramps and on the appearance of the first one set him to work sawing wood for his dinner, seems to have effectually solved the tramp problem—for his farm at least—as not one of the ragged fraternity has been seen around there since.

ALEXANDER ALEXANDER is the name of a New York broker who has been arrested on the charge of grand larceny. His parents might have known that a two-ply namesake of the gentleman who sighed for more worlds to conquer would want the earth some day. They are the ones who are responsible.

THERE will positively be no more fun going to war if they keep on making Gatling guns and other shooting irons. A Mr. Turpin's new electrical gun is warranted to shoot 25,000 bullets per minute. A man with a family would sooner hire some other fellow in his place than to storm batteries manned with such guns.

A PATENT has just been taken out for the manufacture of a new compound intended as a substitute for butter, butterine, oleomargarine and other articles of the sort. It is said to be a superior article, and the owners of the patent have refused an offer of $1,000,000 for it. The cow has evidently outlived her usefulness in this country.

BUENOS AYRES is now the metropolis of the southern hemisphere, a recent census showing a population of 580,666. There is a large American colony in that city, and business is conducted on the American plan. Rio de Janeiro, which has hitherto claimed supremacy as far as population goes, is compelled to take a back seat by her younger and more enterprising rival.

THERE are 19,945,576 unmarried men of marriageable age in this country and 17,183,988 women of the same kind. Either somebody in the census office is a prevaricator or there is a great deal of wasted affection to Uncle Sam's account. What we need is not only a boom in industries but in matrimony. Think of thirty-seven million cross old bachelors and sour old maids!

REV. F. E. CLARK, the originator of the Christian Endeavor movement, is generally known as "Father Endeavor" Clark. "The name originated as a huge joke," he says. "It was given me by an old schoolmate, who possessed a remarkable propensity for punning on names. He took the initial letters of my name, and from these originated the name 'Father Endeavor Clark.'"

THE celebration in London of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Young Men's Christian association was a notable event in the religious world. All denominations of Protestants united in the ceremonies, and the meetings were largely attended. The association has accomplished much good, not only for the churches, but for humanity at large. It has furnished resorts for social converse free from temptations to dissipation, and its libraries and reading rooms have afforded means for intellectual improvement and moral culture whose importance cannot be overestimated.

LORD ROSEBERY is probably the happiest man in England to-day. He should be, at any rate. Twenty-three years ago he vowed that he would marry the richest heiress in England, win the derby and be prime minister before he died. Ladas' victory over the Epsom Down course puts the capping climax upon the sum of his titled owner's ambitions, for Rosebery married Hannah Rothschild, the richest endowed maiden in Great Britain, succeeded Gladstone as premier, and has now won the blue ribbon and the 5,000 guineas, which are the prizes of the world's greatest annual horse race.

MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance union, is a reformer and philanthropist in practice as well as in theory. She has just returned to the association over which she presides her entire salary for the past two years, and desires that it be used to promote the purposes of the organization. This action is due, she says, to the hard times and the difficulty of raising money with which to carry on the work of temperance. Every true gentleman will be glad of the opportunity to tip his hat to Miss Willard.

SHOWS GOOD SIGNS.

Several Lines of Trade Report a Livelier Feeling.

NEW YORK, June 12.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

"The outlook for business seems a little better on the whole, though the improvement is not great. Moreover it is impossible to distinguish between mere replacement of orders canceled for want of fuel or other causes and the new business for which works are anxiously looking. It is somewhat encouraging that the decrease in payments through clearing houses in comparison with 1892 is about 30 per cent. Railroad tonnage is larger than a year ago in live stock and moderate in cereals, but considerably smaller in coal and iron products and in other manufactured goods west-bound.

"With only 2,937 coke ovens working and 14,576 idle, with the Cambria discharging half its force, and seven out of nine of the Carnegie furnaces at Bessemer out of blast the production and manufacture of iron and steel are smaller than at any other time for years. While it is believed deferred work will cause heavy production after the strike terminates the demand for products is at present much below general expectations even at the east. Other industries have been less affected, but many of the textile mills even in New England have now been closed for lack of fuel or of orders, besides other concerns in great number between the Atlantic and the Mississippi river."

"The returns of failures are still encouraging, 216 in the United States for the week, against 322 last year, and 40 in Canada against 27 last year. The liabilities in all failures reported in the month of May were $13,305,357, about $5,420,000 at the east, $4,500,000 at the south and $3,400,000 at the west. Of the aggregate $5,165,025 was of manufacturing and $6,653,499 of trading concerns."

Bradstreet's says:

"Nearly all the unfavorable business conditions of the last three weeks continue to exercise an influence. The few exceptions where improvement is noted are of practically local importance. Retail trade at many centers has been interfered with by unfavorable weather and by further restriction of the purchasing power of thousands of wage-earners, by further industrial trouble, or by sarinkage in production.

"The see-saw prices tip in the opposite direction this week, most strikingly in cereals, oats having advanced 5½c, wheat 3⅜c and corn 1¾c. Potatoes are 20c higher a bushel at the west, bar iron and pig iron are up sharply at St. Louis and live stock at Kansas City. Lard is fractionally higher. Conspicuous decreases in prices of staples reported are in leather and wool, due to heavy receipts of new crop. Coffee is off ⅝c.

"At larger eastern centers there is no improvement in general business. New England cotton mills continue to produce in excess of demands. Southern and Rhode Island cotton mills are shutting down for want of fuel as well as orders. Philadelphia jobbers in dry goods report a better spot demand and the petroleum market there is more active, but Baltimore jobbers in clothing as well as in some other lines have not sent out drummers as formerly.

"Among southern cities covered Richmond, Savannah, Jacksonville and Augusta report the more favorable conditions. At the first there is a better demand for groceries and provisions, for agricultural implements and leaf tobacco, which is quite active.

"There is little far-reaching attending evidence of improvement reported from the west. At Louisville there is more demand for groceries, and the leaf tobacco market is quite active and business being reported. There is more doing among jobbers in hardware at Chicago, although interior merchants tributary to that market have not begun to buy in advance of actual needs, and, on the other hand, the spread of the coal strike is checking business there."

THE NEW REPUBLIC.

Many Wise Provisions in Hawaii's Proposed Constitution.

HONOLULU, June 3, VIA VICTORIA, B. C., June 13.—The constitutional convention has been occupied with its organization for the past two days. A strongly supported proposition was made to give a seat in the convention to L. A. Thurston, without, however, giving him voting power. This proposition received only three votes.

The draft of the constitution, prepared by the executive council, was distributed to the members of the convention. In it the government is called "The Republic of Hawaii." There is a president, no vice president, a cabinet of four ministers, an advisory council of fifteen members, and a legislature consisting of a senate and house of representatives, sitting separately, and each composed of fifteen members. All voters must be born of naturalized citizens and must be able to read, write and speak the English or Hawaiian language with fluency. Electors of senators must possess property valued at $4,000 or a yearly income of $600. An alien who wishes to qualify for naturalization must come from a country with which Hawaii has a treaty concerning naturalization, and must be able to read and write English fluently and must possess property valued at $200 and must renounce all foreign allegiance.

IN ROYALTY'S HOME.

Y. M. C. A. Delegates Inspect Windsor Castle—Adjournment.

LONDON, June 9.—At the invitation of Queen Victoria, the delegates to the international Y. M. C. A. conference visited Windsor Castle, and were conducted through the historic building and grounds by a number of gentlemen-in-waiting, also being served with light refreshments in a tent erected in the great park. All of the private grounds attached to the castle were, for the first time in its history, thrown open for public use and inspection.

Before returning to London the delegates held a farewell meeting at which addresses eulogistic of the queen's courtesy were delivered by representatives of every country in the delegation.

John Wanamaker proposed that a message be sent to President Williams. The motion was carried with enthusiasm. Howard Williams, thanking the assembly on behalf of his father, said that happily his father's illness was not of a serious nature and he hoped to meet them all again three years hence. Rev. Dr. Cuyler pronounced a benediction and the conference was declared dissolved.

THE EIGHT-HOUR DAY.

Declared Unconstitutional by the Nebraska Supreme Court.

LINCOLN, Neb., June 12.—The supreme court decision declaring the eight-hour a day labor law unconstitutional in effect is as follows:

"Sections 1 and 3 of chapter 54 of the session laws of 1891 having provided, in effect, that for all classes of mechanics, servants and laborers, excepting those engaged in farm or domestic labor, a day's work should not exceed eight hours. Held, that these provisions are unconstitutional: first, because the discrimination against farm and domestic laborers is special legislation; second, because by the act in question the constitutional right of parties to contract with reference to compensation for services is denied."

Two Big Implement Houses Are Destroyed —Damage Estimated at $310,000.

KANSAS City, Mo., June 11.—Fire Sunday afternoon destroyed the Keystone Implement company, Nos. 1317 to 1321 West Thirteenth street, and the Buford & George Manufacturing company's building at Nos. 1311 to 1315 West Thirteenth street. Two dwellings adjoining the Keystone building were crushed by the falling wall, and four firemen and a citizen were badly injured.

RAVAGES OF A PLAGUE.

In China Disease Is Carrying Off People by Tens of Thousands.

SHANGHAI, June 13.—No brief communications on the subject can convey an adequate idea of the character and extent of the visitation which is ravaging Canton, Paklios and Hongkong. The disease has long been raging in the two first-named places, and it has carried off tens of thousands of victims in the last few weeks. It reached Hongkong last week. The plague, which is described by medical men as similar in appearance and symptoms to "the great plague of London," which devasted that city in 1665, was noted first in Canton toward the end of April. The disease is accompanied by terrific fever, the temperature going at a bound up to 105 and 106 degrees. Up to May 8 at least 60,000 people have died in Canton. All the immense business of the city was at a standstill, and the inhabitants who could do so were flying to the country. The plague reached Hongkong about May 8, and already forty deaths a day are recorded.

MICHIGAN VILLAGE DESTROYED.

An Area a Mile Wide and Five Miles Long Devastated in the Lumber Regions.

MARQUETTE, Mich., June 12.—Destructive forest fires are raging in the neighborhood of Nestoria, 50 miles west of here. Two bridges on the West Shore road, near here, were burned late Saturday, stopping traffic to Duluth, and a hard fight was necessary to protect the company's property at Nestoria. The burning district covers an area 1 mile wide and 5 miles long, and the destruction to timber must be enormous. Similar big fires extend southward at intervals for many miles. Sagola, a lumbering village of 400 inhabitants, was completely wiped out Saturday night and a freight train on the Milwaukee & Northern passing through there was set on fire and several cars burned. Only the most meager reports can be received, as in many places wires are down and travel suspended entirely.

A STAGE HELD UP.

The Deadly Work of One Lone Highwayman in the West.

WAGONER, I. T., June 12.—Saturday afternoon a lone highwayman, Levi Sanders, a desperate Cherokee character, held up a stage on the road between Fort Gibson and Talequah, where the big Cherokee payment was in progress. He made the passengers get out and secured $70 and some jewelry. One man was shot through the lungs and was left in a precarious condition. The robber then left, going toward Talequah. On the way he shot and killed an Indian boy who was herding cattle, and took his horse and again took to the road, where the robber came upon two wagons. He shot into one of the wagons and killed a woman. The men began shooting at Sanders, who was finally shot literally to pieces.

A MONARCH DEAD.

Morocco's Ruler, Sultan Muley Hassan Foully Murdered.

TANGIER, June 13.—It is now known that Sultan Muley Hassan died suddenly June 7 at Tadla, between Morocco and Casa Blanca. Advices regarding the death of the sultan say that he suffered from fever for four days previous to his death and that he died while giving orders. Some time before his death the sultan began vomiting and continued to suffer in this manner until he expired. It is added that symptoms of his case point to poisoning.

Every one is preparing for a great religious festival Thursday. Europeans continue to enjoy absolute security to life and property.

A party consisting of Bessie and Maggie Blainey, Kate and Martin McClusker, Thomas Scanlon and Patrick Marooney went out for a row on the reservoir. At 4:30 o'clock the boat overturned, throwing all the occupants into the water. Kate McClusker caught the upturned boat and held fast. Patrick Aspen and Thomas Donohue, who were in a boat some distance away, rescued her. Patrick Marooney started for the shore and was picked up by Thomas Lynch. The bodies of Bessie Blainey and Scanlon were recovered.

Augustana Synod.

The 35th annual convention of the Augustana Lutheran synod was held at St. Peter. Among the founders of the synod living and present were: Rev. P. A. Cederstan, Dr. E. Norelius, Rev. P. Beckman and Rev. Carlison. The president recommended more and better work within the English mission, also suggested that English hymn books be published, and the Swedish liturgy. Dr. P. J. Sward was re-elected president, Rev. M. C. Ranseen was elected vice president. A committee consisting of one minister and one lay delegate from each conference and one person representing each of the colleges of the several conferences was elected to review the president's report. The report of the synodal council was then read in part. It suggested that Augustana university be placed under control of the Illinois conference, and that the theological seminary alone be under direct control of the synod.

Big Business.

The mills at the head of the lakes made the greatest run in their history last week, turning out 95,358 barrels of flour, an average of 15,893 barrels daily and 7,349 barrels more than the best previous record for a single week, which was 88,010 barrels during the week which ended November 11 last. In the week preceding the mills produced 86,064 barrels, and in the corresponding week last year the output was 31,261 barrels. The receipts by rail last week were 127,309 barrels, against 194,007 barrels in the preceding week and 199,522 barrels in the corresponding week of last year. Shipments during the week amounted to 345,661 barrels, against 231,939 barrels in the week before, and 185,307 barrels in the corresponding week of last year. Stocks of flour in mill warehouses amount to 62,902 barrels.

Checking Convicts.

In addition to the Bertillon system of measurement in vogue at the Stillwater prison, Warden Wolfer has decided that hereafter a scientific medical examination will be made of each convict entering the prison. The examination will be made thorough and complete, so that the prison officials can better know how to handle the so-called cranks. Inmates will also be examined shortly before their discharge, and in this manner a record will be kept of how their incarceration in prison agreed with their physical and mental condition. As nearly as can be learned no similar system is in vogue in any other prison in the country.

Scarce.

There is not a pound of coal on the docks at the head of the lakes that has not been sold on contract, and it is being delivered as fast as cars can be secured to handle it. Most of it has been sold to the Chicago trunk lines centering at Minneapolis and St. Paul. Up to date no vessel requiring coal for fuel has been refused, although those which had not the stuff engaged on contract have been obliged to pay a pretty stiff price for it.

James G. Nugent, who shot his daughter last February, was sentenced by the court at Buffalo to penitentiary for life.

Little John Reed, the 4-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. John Reed, Minneapolis, was run over by a loaded wood cart and was almost instantly killed. He had tried to hang on the cart and fell under the wheels, which crushed his skull in a horrible manner. No blame is attached to the driver, Charles Brennar, as he did not know that the boy was on the cart.

JEWELRY AND SILVERWARE.

THE return of pendants is conspicuous.

A PRETTY new slide is a lyre set with gems.

TINY alcohol lamps with ivory handles are seen everywhere.

A CURIOUS novelty is a street lamp in silver gilt and enamel.

THERE is a sudden influx of match safes of silver in raised relief.

LONG silver brooches are of blue enamel with broken edges of silver.

ICE cream sets are oblong salvers with broken edges, and trowel-like knives.

THE mania abroad for paste in millinery, brooches and slides is commented upon on every side.

ALMOST every woman now wears a long slim chain of silver if not of gold. The silver chains punctuated with enameled beads are very pretty.

NEW silver brooches are in foliated forms with bulbs of enamel set in the interstices. These are intended to look like torquoise, catseyes and pearls.

ORNAMENTS of frosted gold are seen. The tortoise and the lizard are in the lead. The lizard has a green olivine streak down his back. The tortoise is spotted with jewels.

THE silver vases that are now brought out are the most artistic yet seen. They are intended for single flowers. A new form is a copy of the shape known as the pilgrim vase.—Jeweler's Circular.

CYCLING IN CHINA.

Some Woes of a Yankee Wheelman in the Flowery Kingdom.

The Way "Ah Sin" Showed Appreciation of "Foreign Devil" Frank Lenz—Pursued by a Howling Mob of Angry Pigtails—Some Narrow Escapes.

[Special Letter.]

When Wheelman Frank G. Lenz, of Pittsburgh, began his now famous world-girdling bicycle tour under the auspices of the Outing Magazine, neither he nor the magazine people dreamed of the serious perils the sturdy young fellow would be compelled to face during his passage through the land of the uncertain Mongolian. The lower classes in the interior of China are imbued with a combination of superstitions, ignorance and detestation of foreigners, or "foreign devils," as they are politely termed, which is almost past belief. We of this enlightened land can afford to smile pityingly upon such narrow-mindedness,

NARROW WHEELBARROW BRIDGE.

but to the daring wheelman pedaling his "foreign cart" through John Chinaman's territory, native prejudice becomes a very serious thing indeed. In the May number of Outing poor Lenz gives some striking illustrations of this, and in a letter just received by the publisher of Outing he uses the following significant language in reference to an attack upon him by a mob of ignorant natives: "For a moment it was touch and go. Two score of hoes and clubs were many times more than a match for my revolver, and I knew it. To fight was useless; to pray seemed equally vain, for it appeared as if the Lord had not inspected this country lately, and had overlooked the lonely Yankee wanderer. For some unknown reason (Providence interfered, I firmly believe), the mob held their hands for one moment. It was a dramatic pause—like the paws of a grizzly bear, one may need experience it but once in his life. The scene is burnt into my memory and will never be forgotten. I was calm, for in truth I could hear the rippling of the dark river. There was no need to think or struggle more—I realized that I had enjoyed my last outing."

Speaking of accommodations furnished to travelers, Lenz says: "On arriving at a Chinese inn I never asked any questions, but rolled the wheel right in, sat down among the Chinamen, and ordered my rice as unconcernedly as a native. From two to four bowls of rice compose a square meal, and in the center of the table are fish and greens, from which each helps himself with chop sticks. The heads and bones of the smaller fish served are eaten as a matter of course, and I caused surprise by leaving my share undevoured. During meals, pigs, dogs and cats lovingly slide between one's legs in and out from under the table.

"Three times a day the innkeeper cooked rice and greens for one wheelbarrow coolie and myself. I gave him some extra money for eggs and meat which he cooked fairly well.

"Most of the people live in abject poverty and subsist wholly on rice and greens. The proportion of poor in China is probably greater than in any other country in the world. The houses in the towns and cities are mostly built of frail brick walls, with floors of stone or brick in the more pretentious structures. In hamlets and the rural districts the walls are made of poles, mud, straw or light bamboo. These structures are covered with tile or straw roofs and have no floors except the bare ground. There is but little furniture; generally only a table, with a few trestles to sit on. Even the Chinese mandarin has but a poorly-furnished house, though he makes such an elaborate display in his silks, satins and ornaments when seated proudly in his fancy carrying-chair. Then his attendants walking ahead with signs, flags and drums, and another batch, including his secretaries on ponies in the rear, are apt to impress the 'foreign devil' with the pigtailed potentate's importance.

AFTER A SEVEN-DAYS' TRAMP.

"Stoves there are none. In cold weather a fire is built on the ground, and the smoke after filling the house, escapes through the chinks in the walls and roof. The cooking-ovens have no chimneys. Rice straw, brush and twigs from the fields, forest and hillside are used for fuel. The charred embers remaining after the meals are cooked are scraped together into small clay pots and carried about to warm the hands and feet."

Lenz thus described his first experience with hostile natives: "The air was bitter cold the third morning of our tramp, and the big coolie needed a double dose of opium. We got started by eleven o'clock, and had left the telegraph road to the left and had crossed the Yangtsi river to the north side. The road was over a low bottom land to Wankiangshien, situated on a knoll, and surrounded by a partly ruined wall covered with vines. The crowd all yelled; 'foreign devil,' at which I only smiled, as we walked along through the narrow and crowded streets. The coolies were tired and wished to stop here, but I was anxious to push on to a hamlet inn, knowing by experience there was no peace for me in a town of any size. At the west gate my coolies walked into an inn regardless of my wishes. The Chinese followed, pushing and yelling: 'Yankweiza.' The proprietor grew angry, my big coolie became excited, turned and called the crowd something that made them furious. They pounced upon him, one struck him over the head, and a general fight seemed likely to ensue. Quickly moving in front of my coolie and the crowd, I beckoned them to keep quiet, then ordered the coolies to pick up the wheel and leave the town. I followed by their side, and managed to keep the angry crowd off without using my revolver.

"Two of the nickeled hinges on my valise had been twisted off; the thieves had no doubt mistaken them for silver. Almost distracted, I pointed to the empty tool pouch, but the following crowd shook their heads, insisted that I should ride, and began throwing stones at a distance. Presently they became bolder and came on closer, and one stone struck me on the leg. Things were getting uncomfortable; my wheel clogged up with mud and snow again and I could not get away. Drawing my revolver, I flourished it about, but they only gave fiendish yells and came closer. Dropping the wheel in the snow, I gave chase, and fired three times in the air. The crowd of thirty or forty ran as fast as their legs could carry them. When I returned, I was only followed a short distance by some of the bolder ones, who for a time did not venture within a stone's throw. Two burly young Chinamen grew bolder and followed closer and began throwing stones again. Suddenly I laid the wheel down, and, with as horrible a yell as I could produce, I rushed for them. They just gave one look to make sure that I was coming, then it was really laughable to see how fast the big cowards traveled, although I am comparatively a small man."

Lenz experienced great difficulty in keeping his hired coolies up to their work. In referring to one of them, he throws a side light on that bane of the Chinese, the opium traffic, as follows:

"The opium fiend kept up his smoking, which compelled me to watch him constantly. I would go along with him into the opium dens and not let him smoke too much. For twenty 'cash,' or about a cent and a half, a block cup of opium is sold, which makes three paste balls for smoking. The Chinese at these dens were amazed at my audacity and looked displeased at first, but in a few minutes I would have them laughing. They were much surprised that I, a foreigner, did not smoke opium. The Chinese women as well as the men are frequenters of these vile places. Some of the men were pitiful-looking beings, dirty and unwashed for weeks, their clothing in tatters, their once raven-black hair fallen out, but, still, every 'cash' they get goes for this deadly drug. In every hamlet or village, ever so remote, and in road inns they sell opium. The competition in opium dens is so great that the price charged the opium smokers is really low, considering the high price paid by the proprietor buying it wholesale, so the enormous profit on opium goes to India. The Chinese government, of course, receives some revenue on this article from duties, but would be only too glad to prohibit its import were it not for the treaty with the English."

THE PRICE OF PROTECTION.

Trusts and Monopolists Fattened by the McKinley Tariff.

How much may be collected by the protected tariff ring of manufacturers, and how much actually is collected, are two different questions. One trust will collect all its protection, another trust will collect only one-half, or perhaps only one-quarter. The amount collected depends upon the number of people in the trust, and how thoroughly they hang together. Very often a member, to make a fortune at once, will break all his agreements, sell under the trust price and the trust will be broken and have to reorganize. For example, the sugar trust collects the whole amount of its protection. The salt trust collected the whole amount until it broke. Then it reformed, and now it is collecting about 60 per cent. The woolen men have altogether about twenty private selling agreements, or trusts. In some of these trusts, they collect all their protection, and in others only 10 per cent. The collection of the protection is a matter of organization.

In all the United States there are about 15,000 protected mill-owners, who are organized into 450 to 469 private trusts. The par value of their protection before the McKinley bill went into effect was $1,320,000,000 yearly. That was the amount that these trusts were authorized by law to collect from the people in taxes annually—if they could. The amount that they did collect from the people in the year 1890 was very carefully estimated. The inquiry took many months, and the lowest possible figure that represented their actual collection of taxes was $680,000,000. The McKinley bill raised the par value of their protection, in other words, the amount of taxes that they were authorized to levy upon the people and compel them to pay yearly, from $1,320,000,000 to $1,660,000,000. How much they collect, how much they pocket and how much the people pay is, as Mr. Frick says, the business of nobody but those who collect the money.

In 1890 the people paid at the custom house $229,000,000 in taxes that went into the federal treasury at Washington, and was returned to them in the form of services rendered. That same year they paid to 450 trusts $680,000,000 taxes, not one cent of which was returned to them in the form of any service whatever. The tariff taxes paid by the people for 1890 exceeded $909,000,000, of which one-quarter was for the public good, and three-quarters of which was bald and naked robbery. That the treasury got $229,000,000 was fortunate, for the McKinley bill put a stop to such a large proportion coming into the treasury. While it increased the potential tax on the people, it decreased the amount they paid to the government, and increased the amount they paid to the trusts.

For the benefit of four men alone, for example, the McKinley bill added $6 to the previous duties on every gun costing $12. Not a cent of this duty would go into the treasury, for this made the duty on foreign guns 100 per cent., and barred them out. A man who wanted a $12 shotgun had to buy from one of the four American makers and pay $18—$6 more than it was worth. Protection gave him more work. He had to work overtime to earn this extra $6. But he was working for the gun, and he had to pay nine days' wages for it under protection, against six days' wages without. The four gunmakers took from him three days' labor, or gave him three days' extra labor, as you like.

The object of the McKinley bill was to increase the tariff taxes levied upon the people, but decrease the amount they paid to the treasury, and increase the amount they paid to the trusts. All this was done by the manner in which the taxes were levied. It was not done through the amount or the percentage.

The McKinley tariff was lower than that which it succeeded. It might have been the lowest of low tariffs; it might not have turned any money into the treasury, and yet it might have been of even more benefit than it was to the trusts, imposing harder burdens of taxation upon the people.

Under the McKinley bill the public taxes paid into the treasury fell from $229,000,000 in 1890, to $177,000,000 in 1892, and for 1894 will probably go lower yet. At the same time, the amount of taxes paid to the trusts has risen from $680,000,000 to $860,000,000, as near as can be estimated.—N. Y. World.

PARAGRAPHIC POINTERS.

——President Harrison declares that he is not a candidate for the presidency. If he were nominated we are inclined to think that he would continue to be of that opinion after the votes were counted.—Buffalo Commercial (Rep.).

——The republican press is felicitating itself on the fact that the United States supreme court has reversed six of Mr. Gresham's judicial decisions. But perhaps the fact is harder on the supreme court than on Gresham.—St. Louis Republic.

——At recent county conventions in Georgia resolutions indorsing the administration have been adopted. They show that the vast majority of democrats in the state are untainted with populism, soreheadism and the other dangerous "isms" the propagation of which is being attempted in some quarters.—Savannah News.

——If ex-President Harrison is so violently opposed to gerrymanders he should give a little attention and advice to the republican members of the Ohio legislature. These statesmen are now considering a bill to gerrymander the judicial districts of Ohio so that it will take thirty-one thousand seven hundred democratic votes to elect a democratic judge, while sixty-five hundred votes will elevate a republican to the bench.—N. Y. World.

——If the American laborer has approximately received his share of the product of his labor through the operation of the tariff, why have we these exhibitions of organized vagabondage under Coxey, Kelly and others, while the country as a whole has grown richer? What is the meaning of the presence in this country of thousands of Hungarians, Italians, Poles and other foreign laborers of the cheapest class? Why this constant succession of strikes and labor riots, caused by reductions of wages, or efforts to substitute foreign contract labor for American labor; disturbances that have been most frequent and most troublesome while the party of protection was in the full flush of power? Why have wages been so steadily reduced in industries most highly protected?—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A DISASTROUS POLICY.

Legislative Treason Perpetrated by Republican Senators.

Republican senators have assumed an attitude that cannot but bring upon them the strongest condemnation of the country. It is their determination to insist upon a reasonable discussion of the pending tariff measure. Had they not stepped to construe this announcement it might have been accepted as asserting an honest desire to still further enlighten themselves and the nation on the subject under consideration. They would have at least avoided confession of a purpose involving the direst disaster that legislative treason could at this time inflict upon the people of the United States. They boldly avow the adoption of dilatory tactics as a means of killing the measure for which every material interest of the country is appealing as the one means of averting impending ruin.

In this cold-blooded avowal there is a depth of treachery, a contempt for popular rights, a cruelty toward suffering humanity, a wanton sacrifice of the means to restore prosperity, such as has no parallel in the annals of civilized government. The shallow pretense of "reasonable debate" is worthy of men who thus hold party superior to country, and for the attainment of political ends will go to a length that imperils our national existence. There is not a ray of light that they can throw upon the question under consideration. There is no point of view from which it has not been approached, no argument which has not been advanced times without number and for its full weight. Yet these men who hold in trust the highest interests of the people deliberately propose to extend the dreary waste of talk and drivel until the bill is killed, though the country share the same fate.

If they can prevent it there will be no longer sessions nor will they discommode themselves by meeting at night. Their policy is not to hasten legislation, but to prevent it. With the demands of the people in their ears and a scene of universal disaster about them, from which there is no escape, save through the deliverance of remedial legislation, they assume the part of Nero, as he watched the conflagration of Rome. Wedded to the idols of protection, intrenched behind the wealth of combines, trusts and monopolies, they are deaf to the popular appeal and sacrifice patriotism to the same monstrous iniquity which has brought calamity upon a free people. Their mendacity is that of the system they represent. Their cruelty is that which has legalized robbery and exacted tribute from masses to fatten the coffers of favored beneficiaries.

It is difficult for a free people, vested with the sacred right of self-government, to tolerate such a conspiracy as this. In times of general prosperity, with the people employed and comfortable, a line of policy inspired by political consideration, might be acquiesced in, though not approved of. Conditions do not permit of such an acceptance of the situation at this time. Business is stagnant. Thousands are out of employment. Capital wants to know the legal restrictions under which it must operate before it will come out of retirement. There is a spirit of unrest that should be soothed, not aggravated. There is a just and reasonable appeal made by the people to their representatives, which should be speedily granted, not scorned. The republican senators have assumed a responsibility that only the insolence of protection would dare to suggest.—Detroit Free Press.

UNRELIABLE PLEDGES.

How the Republicans Are Obstructing Tariff Legislation.

An illustration of the republican programme of obstruction to the proposed tariff bill was furnished the other day when Senator Allison moved to amend the first paragraph in the chemical schedule by restoring the rate of duty on acetic acid provided in the McKinley bill. On this a long discussion ensued, and the amendment was finally defeated, only to give place to a second involving the same principle, which gave excuse for a renewal of the debate. In this way the entire day was consumed and no result was reached. The tariff bill covers several thousand articles. Upon each one of these the same course may pursued—from one day to a month being consumed in the discussion of each. The present generation of senators may pass away and give place to their grandchildren, and still the talk may proceed, and when the millenium shall have begun the same discussion will be in progress.

This incident illustrates how little reliance can be placed upon the pledges of the republicans. Some time ago at a caucus regularly called it was agreed that no factious amendments would be offered and no fillibustering methods employed to delay action on the bill. Yet at the beginning of the debate this pledge has been deliberately violated and a system inaugurated that promises to be effective in defeating any action of whatever nature. It has often been said that there is honor among thieves; it has been often demonstrated that there is no honor among the republicans in the United States senate.

There is every reason to believe that the action of the caucus of republican senators was taken with a deliberate purpose to conceal their real purpose from the public, and with the express intention of paying no heed to either the letter or the spirit of the promise they made. The impatience of the country for action on the tariff was too manifest to fail of recognition. It was thought expedient to allay this impatience in a manner by making fair promises. But it was an entirely different thing when it came to carrying out those promises. Such a thing was never contemplated.

It is well that the republicans have been unmasked and their true policy revealed to the people. The responsibility for further delay will rest upon their shoulders. The democrats are ready for immediate action. They will vote for the bill as it stands to-day, not because they approve of its every detail, but because they recognize the fact that it is the best they can do under existing circumstances.

Unless the republicans change their plans they will have a long account to settle with the people. No man guilty of impeding the progress of this bill deserves, or will receive, the public confidence, and he may make up his mind to bid farewell to the scene of his present activities or inactivities at the close of his present term. The country has already suffered too much to patiently endure further delays.—St. Paul Globe.

That baking powder which is both purest and strongest makes the most digestible and wholesome food.

Why should not every housekeeper avail herself of the baking powder which will give her the best food with the least trouble?

Avoid all baking powders sold with a gift or prize, or at a lower price than the Royal, as they invariably contain alum, lime or sulphuric acid, and render the food unwholesome.

Certain protection from alum baking powders can be had by declining to accept any substitute for the Royal, which is absolutely pure.

THE largest library in the world is the Bibliotheque National, of Paris. It contains 1,400,000 volumes.

THE titles of 8,000 books, mostly controversial, dealing with the subject of baptism, are given in the catalogues.

SOME very ancient books are to be found in the sacred relics at Ceylon. They are formed of palm leaves written upon with a metal pen, and are bound merely by a silken string.

THE public library of Easthampton, Mass., has been presented with a wedding dress over 100 years old. The garment is of "changeable silk" and weighs less than eight ounces.

A NEW free public library, to contain 80,000 volumes, is building in Manchester. This will give the city a total of 420,000 volumes housed in five libraries, for free public use.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

DELANO DIARY

--Rev. Webb, Rev. Millspaugh's successor, has written that he will hold services here in the near future.

—On Monday evening quite a wind whirled the dust through the streets uutil a copious shower settled it and refreshed the gardens. In the Rader neighborhood, hail did some damage, At Willcults 26 light of glass were smashed, and some roofs raised.

—In an other column appears the oration of Vernon Wilder at the graduating exercises at the City Hall on Friday evening last. It is to the point and well worthy the perusal of our readers. Vernon has evidently given this important subject some thought.

—On Monday some of Delano's equine population felt friskey, even for them, and created considerable excitement for a short time. First came one of Young's livery teams with Miss Mable holding onto the lines from the pine tree to town until her fingers were most broke. As the galloping steeds arrived on lower River Street they collided with a hind wheel of Olof Peterson's carryall, contaning his daughter Katie and himself; spokes flew; so did Katie, and Olof had his countenance somewhat disfigured. Operator Williams, vaulted into the rear of the buggy and relieving the fainting Mable of the ribbons soon brought the tired horses to a stand. In a very few minuites John Coolen's fine blacks took a run from the lumberyard up Forth Street to the barn. Charley there captured them with slight damage; reach being about all.

—Wm. Ziebarth has been appointed chairman of the Board of Supervisors of Franklin, vice James Sherry removed to Montana. Mr. Z. is a live officer and up to snuff in township and county affairs and will look out for the interest of his constituents about as faithfully as anybody could. Of course it is not expected that the bird up street will be satisfied with this appointment. The appointing powers must expect to hear her s-c-r-e-e-c-h; as usual. But her noise is little minded now-a-days; the cutting edge has been dullled, by constant use, often times where uncalled for, until it has lost much of its former powers; and like the rattlesnake whose fangs have been extracted she now is snapping and biting at all that cross her path but with not much more effect. She may assume some striking attitudes, and make those not acquainted with the circumstances think she is going to hurt somebody, but its principally scare.

—On Sunday evening the village was thrown into a fever of excitement by the announcement that Alfred Johnson, who for the past few years had with his family occupied a house on the west side of the river had cut his wife's and his own throats with a razor, crowds of people flocked over to the little home to find Alfred lying on the floor, on his back, with a slash across the wind pipe and back under the left ear at which latter place two gashes were made, the floor in the bed room was literally covered with blood and the bed bespattered; two razors on the floor told the tale. Johnson kicked with both feet with all his strength when the surgeon came to try to sew up the gashes, but was finally held still by the aid of some half a dozen men and a little chloroform when it was found by moving him, that his jugular vein had been severed and he quickly succumbed to the loss of blood. His wife was taken across the street to Mr. Buck's where her wounds were found not to be fatal and were dressed. The deceased had been brooding over the loss of property by a recent bargain for some land. He leaves a wife and three sons and one daughter, who have the sympathy of the community.

—Subscribe and advertise in the Buffalo Gazette.

—Mr. Webb will hold Episcopal service in the Presbyterian church on Monday evening, June 18th.

—Several interesting articles are crowded out this week. Came too late and on account of sickness.

--A. F. Mrocok, lost his house and other property by fire, this morning. He carried about $900 insurance.

—The Delaro Cornet Band and the St. Anthony Benevolence Aid Society are going to Waconia to visit the Society at that place, so we are told.

—There was a gentleman from the Emerald Isle, in to show us a fiddle, a few minuites ago, which he claims is 180 years old; it use to belong to Dan Rice's circus; and was born in Italy.

—The monthly fair on Saturday last was well attended. Prices of stock seem low but as compared with other salable products of the farm are a fair average; milk cows bought from 20 to 30 dollors each.

—It was not well known that one of L. M. Maxffeld's plum trees belonged to the High School graduating class until the next morning after commencement when it was found wearing a class badge.

—On Monday the house of John Longash was quarantined on account of diphtheria. His oldest daughter age 14 being taken suddenly ill with it that morning. She was in church on Sunday and apparently as well as ussual.

—Our fellow townsman Willis E. Johnson, is reported in Saturday's Globe as having been appointed a member of the faculty of the State Normal School of St. Cloud; Good for Willis! Hurrah for Delano! The Professor is a panis-taking man and one bound to succeed.

Delano High School Commencement.

On Friday evening, in the City Hall was held the first Commencement exercises of the Delano High School. A large audience was present and everything passed off plesantly and in order. Music was made for the occasion by the Delano Cornett Band. Rev. J. W. Powell, made a prayer; the graduating class consisting of Vernon Wilder, Emery Cunningham, Roy Wilder and Edward A. Freeman each delivered an oration; all of which were well received and the orators presented with numerous bouquets from the audience sent up by Misses Grace O'Hair and Stella Davis. Professor R. C. Dewey made some remarks and the presenting of the Diplomas was done by Chas. A. Vorse President of the Board of Education, who was about as timid as any of the boys but got through the job in good form after which congratulations were in order. Delano now boasts of a quartette of High School graduates and is as proud as a boy with a new pair of red topped boots used to be.

The hall was nicely arranged for the exercises. The stage was elegantly arranged with potted and cut flowers in profusion. Each of the graduates was the recipient of a couple of books as presents, and the wish of all is that the young men may make their marks in an honorable way in the world, and that each year may see the repetition of the commencement with an ever increasing number of graduates. Success to Delano High School; and to it's graduates.

County Cullings.

The Democrat State central committee have called the state convention to meet in St. Paul, Sept. 5, at 10 A. M.

The representation is to be two for each county and one for every 150 votes or major fraction thereof cast for Daniel W. Lawler two years ago. The Times gives Wright county 1674 votes for Lawler, with 13 delegates, while the Globe has choked us off with 8 delegates this must be seen to, and our faithful followers want to be at the caucuses and see that true and tried men are sent as delegates to the county convention called to send these delegates to St. Paul.

Among Our Exchanges.

David Gorman has been retained on the force by the new revenne collector Harries, temporarily at least.—Litchfield Independent.

Frank L Randall, county Attorney of Winona county, and J. V. I. Dodd, a St. Paul attorney, will be here today. In company with the editor of the Buedget they are going to take a trip north enjoying themselves in fishing, camping out, etc. They will commune with nature and aboriginal man until the tariff bill is passed, or some time thereabouts.—Bede's Budget.

A syndicate of Englishmen have bought the Elgin watch factory, paying for the same 7,000,000 in British gold. England is evidently growing weary of democratic procrastination in the matter of securing for her the promised free or freer trade, hence she sends her bags of gold here to exchange for manufacturing plants. This is the kind of commercial intercourse with England that our country can well afford.—Pope County Journal.

Right here in Duluth, to go no further, that was the one thing that made Mayor Baldwin so conspicuously unpopular? Was it surrendering to a trust? He would have been forgiven for that much more readily by the people who were angered; he would have escaped, for that, the anger of many wha were enraged at what he did. He refused to stand up for what the iron ore combination wanted and he was crucified for it. Of course it dosen't look that way to the people who have criticised Baldwin; from their point of yiew he was failing to stand up for Duluth. But people in other districts might look at iron ore as we look at sugar or wool. The Louisiana planters are angry with their represenatives for not getting more, just when we think they haye been inconsistent in demanding protection for themselves. And the Ohio people nave been making a fuss that seems absurd to us over free wool.—Duluth Commonwealth.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

Mr. Editor:—Amid all the perplexities, anxieties, dissapointments and hard times we still live, but these checkered lives of ours must pass through the crucible many times in order for us to realize that the chastening rod of affliction has been a blessing to us. Nations as well as indiyiduals fall from grace and become a hissing and a by-word to all other countries. I have thought, may this not be the case with us; for it certainly seems, we as a nation, have got off the track, but no doubt this theme has become an old song to you and you do not care to hear any more about it, but out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh, you know we hear a good deal about free trade, England and pauper labor over there. I wish to qote a little from a reliable agricultural paper of Minnesota. "The average price received by English farmers in 1893 for the products named were: Wheat, 80 cts., barley, 77cts., oats, 56 cts.," and they had no McKinley tariff bill either and it is said that horses. sheep, wool and all other farm products bring a better price in free trade England than in this counry, but one says how can that be when they have no McKinley tariff bill over there? Yes, we may congratulate ourselves we haye got hard times all right enough, some lay it to one thing, and some to another. Many say the democrats are to blame for it all but this thing was not done in a corner while the poor democrats have to bear a large share of the blame for these hard times, the other fellow was putting the chestnuts in his pocket but it is no use to use any more paper over this theme, for a volumn as large as the five books of Moses would not suffice to tell of all the injustice being done to those who have created the wealth of this country, sometimes I think, is this nation what it appears to be.

Blood and treasure have been poured out in profusion that this nation might live. Batties have been fought victories won, monuments been erected to those who gave their lives as a sacrifices upon their country's alter, and is all these costly sacrifices to be for naught, if this is not enough for atonement we hope the Lord may provide some better thing that we, as American beople, may not loose our heritage.

Next in order will be crop reports first, the prospect for rye and hay is good and wheat, oats, corn, and potatoes is quite promising, and should the weather be favorable no doubt there will be a good yield of the above named crops.

George Washington was in Minneapolis one day last week before the examining board for increase of pension. Mr. Washington is deficent in the left knee and spinal column.

Had quite a rain and wind last evening, the former was received with much joy, but the later with a good deal of dread.

Quite a good many people went from Atmstrong to the grove meeting last Sunday held near John Rader's.

TheCounty surveyor was in our town three or four days last week locating a road along south side of the R. R. track from Armstrong to Shaw's crossing, this will shorten the road for Delano peope when they went to drive to Minneapolis.

The chief captains and mighty men in politics in Hennepin county are making themselves ready for the coming conflict, the trouble is every fellow wants office and there is not enough to go around.

The Assessor of our town has about finished his work, find in the town few sheep but much dog, can't see why there is so many dogs unless it is to consume the great surplus of farm produce that some people are all the time talking about. is it right to give your childrens bread to the dogs.

JOHN H. MCGARY.

CORRESPONENCE

WAVERLY WINKS.

Mrs. Topping, of Minneapolis is visiting her son, Editor Topping, this week.

Quinn Bros. have flung to the breeze a new sign on their warehouse proclaiming to the world that the McCormick machines are the best.

Mr J. M. Casey is improving his property with a new coat of paint.

Mr. Morse, of Minneapolis, spent Tuesday with his brother, Cashier Morse of the State Bank of Waverly.

Mr. Velo Sapaye and Miss Cardnal were married at the Catholic church Thursday morning by Father Guillot.

The ball game Sunday between the home team and the Maple Lake nine resulted in a victory for the former. The tally being 31 to 5.

There is no opposition to the re-nom- of Isaac Podas for Register of Deeds. Mr. Podas is an industrious and competent officer and a genial gentleman. He will be elected by a large majority.

There is no doubt whatever that Mr. Frank McKnight will be renominated by the democrats for treasurer. He has made an excellent officer, closely attending to his duties and conducting the treasurer's office with exceptional ability. He stands high not only among democrats but among men of all political faiths, and owing to his wide acquaintance will poll a large vote. no stronger candidate for the office can be found.

The Populists propose to put a full county ticket in the field this fall. David Cochran, who has espoused the cause of the party, is mentioned for Judge.

Chairman Quinn was over to the county seat the begining of the week.

Mr. Wallace King's new Diamond A. mill is nearly completed.

How would this do for the Democratic County Ticket:

Sheriff—John C. Nugent.
Treasurer—Frank McKnight.
County Attorney—M. A. O'Hair.
Judge of Probate—W. H. Cutting.
Register of Deeds—Isaac Podas.
Auditor—S. J. Mealey.
Supt. of Schools--Ritchie.

The Republican would have to keep on the move while wrestling with such a combination as that.

SMITH LAKE.

Mrs. Parin who was assulted and terribly beaten by three men about 9 o'clock last Friday evening has since been dangerously ill. She says that at the time mentioned she went out to the lake a short distance from the house for a pail of water when three men came up from behind her and threw her upon the ground and closed her mouth so that she could not give alarm, after she was beaten into insensibility they took what money she had in her pocket, about $20 after she recovered she crawled back to the house about 2 o'clock in the morning.

Mrs. Parin recognized one of her assailants a notorious character of this place whose career has been that of perjury, and robery, and various crimes. There is much excitement and indignation among the people here over the brutal and dastardly crime.

The arrest of the parties is looked for at any moment.

SONS OF AMERICA.

BY OSMAN C. HOOPER.

Sons of America! Heirs to the glory
God-guided patriots nobly have won;
Liberty stands on our mountain-tops hoary,
Lighting her torch from the fires of the sun.

CHORUS—Speed the message onward,
Strivings deep and long
Here at last are bursting
In triumphant song.
Liberty and union,
Set 'twixt sea and sea;
Blood-bought by our fathers,
Here shall ever be.

Liberty, dream of the Pilgrims' devotion,
Here to a stature heroic has grown;
Driving back foes that came over the ocean,
Crushing the enemies sprung from our own.
CHORUS.

Fearful the cost, but how priceless the treasure!
Battlefields were but the altars to God;
War-clouds the incense and cannon the measure,
Lives, the free sacrifice redd'ning the sod.
CHORUS.

Liberty, patron of cot and of palace,
May our devotion to thee never cease;
Long may we drink from thy heavenly chalice,
Deep to contentment, and progress and peace.
CHORUS.

Banner all glorious, float ever o'er us!
Every star shining there steadfast and true;
Holding the lesson of Union before us,
Written for aye in the Red, White and Blue.
CHORUS.

WANT Mayor Eustice have a handfull to handle when General Donnelly's army arrives in their wagons along about the 10th of July? Generals Wilson or Jumbo wasn't a patchen.

THAT fellow that got up the scare about Coxeyites going to burn up the public buildings in Washington must have read Donnelly's Cæsars Column It seamed to have been seasoned with same kink of Sage.

OF COURSE I. Donnelly has invited the delegates to the state convention to be held in Minneapolis, on July 10, to, as far as possible, come in wagons; yet we don't believe every nondescript outfit we see passing through our country is bound for that gathering. For instance, Johnston Mealey, and his pacer are some times seen headed that way but invariably they have returned.

THE Litchfield Saturday Review reads State Treasurer Bobleeter rather a severe scolding for carrying about $1,000,000 of Minnesota money, on deposit in various State banks to Tennessee and other States and investing it in bonds. The Review says this money is needed at home, and we guess that's about right. But instead of keeping a milion of dollars piled up in banks; or invested in bonds why can't our State invest it in roads and bridges and give the poor people a chance to get a hold of some of it?

THE Eagle seems to fear that her old readers will forget that Mr. William Ziebarth, once upon a time, sued her for libel. Most people, with knowledge sufficient to run a newspaper, would allow the other fellow to rake up such a thing; or let it rest as far down the corridors of oblivion as it would. But the old bird seems fond of calling them up; even though obliged to admit that she did s-c-r-e-e-c-h a l-i-t-t-l-e herself; as, witness the following from yesterday's Eagle. "By the way, when the critical point was reached in the noose tightening affair, the "old bird" did not s-c-r-e-e-c-h near much as did the other fellow." Perhaps what little conscience she ever had, if she ever had any, had become inured to such an honor as she seems to think that was. When the "old bird" wants to treat her readers to a good old fashioned feast of garrion from the recesses of her well filled crie, why don't she refer to the time the chief came home and exultingly announced that he had won his case; the other fellow getting judgment for only, as our memory says one dollar. A by stander suggested that the damages were a small consideration as compared to being proven a liar. Afterwards someone thought that Eagle lies were cheap affairs if they only damaged a man a dollar's worth. The "old bird" ought not keep back the choke fruit, when she spreads such a feast.

COMMENCEMENT ORATION.

Strikes and Strikers.

(BY ROY WILDER)

There is no question, at the present time that is receiving more thought than that of strikes and strikers and the distinction between labor and capital. Since the middle of the fourteenthcentury, combined labor has opposed the efforts of employers to regulate wages and the hours of labor. In Europe, the plague of 1348, which lasted nearly eight years, destroyed nearly two-thirds of the human race, then exisiting. The scarcity of labor became so great that their was a question as to the possibility of providing. The laboring men took adyantage of this and demanded an increase of wages. This was the first strike and ever since they have occurred at interyals and haye been met with by force on the part of the employers.

Let us consider for a moment the causes. Until recent times the most frequent causes have been, and effort to raise wages or resist a reduction thereof, to secure shorter working hours or to resist an increase of the hour of labor. But at the present time more important than these, is another which is rapidly becoming the chief ground of contention between employers and employes; namely, the employment of non-union men. In a strike due to this last cause there is a doubt as to weather it has been called because of some direct injury to the men or simply because of the enmity for non-unionists, and thus to compel them either to join the union or be thrown out of work.

The strikes of the present time are far greater and more serious than those of the past. This is because of the federation of labor. A few years ago each union was an independent organization, but to day the uuion of men in trade has become a union of different trades together, and practical sympathy has taken the form of aiding a streke by striking also. This naturally increases the area of the contest and involves persons in the strike who are wholly disinterested. This federation of labor is well illustrated by the American Railway Union which receives into its ranks all railroad employes, skilled and unskilled.

Another reason why the dangers of collisions between workmen and employers are so great is the different spirit of organized labor of to-day from that of former years. The old trade unionists had no sympathy whatever for State Socialistic notions. He had no quarrel with free competition, property, or the rights of the employer to be his own master. He claimed the right to strike, to boycott, and to act in concert with his fellows, but he did not theoretically go to any greater length. To be sure, he occasionally resorted to violence, but it was in the heat of the struggle and no attempt was ever made to justify it. Now there is an altogether different feeling. The Union of to-day supports the State socialistic doctrine; that free competition is incompatible with the interests of labor, and that strikes are but the first encounters which must bring on the inevitable conflict between labor and capital.

At one time in England a law was established, making it a crime for a workman te enter into a combination to, in any way, affect wages or the hours of labor. Was not this most unjust? It was and was therefore soon repealed, but to-day, in this the nineteenth century, in the United States, the most enlightened nation on the face of the globe, it was nearly paralled by the decision of one Judge Jenkins, who declared that the employes of the Norhern Pacific R. R. Company, should not strike. Shall not the laborer have a voice in the sale of his labor? Has he not the right to demand the highest market price for his labor as well as the employer to do so for the product of that labor? Will this be a free country if a judicial officer shall say that the laborer shall work for a certain price, whether it be satisfactory or not? No workmen have a right to a voice in the regulation of their wages and if they can secure justice in no other way then may they strike.

I say employes have the right to strike, but they have not the right to carry a strike to the extent that they do at the present time. For example, in railroad strikes, the stopping of trains run by non-unionists, whie this may be a most effective means of compelling the company to consider the demands of the Union, yet it is unquestionably illegal Employes have no wright whatever to interfere which has caused public opinion to be opposed to strikes and such a number of them to result so disastriously for the employes.

As to the settlement of labor dispute, there is no better way than by a friendly conference between representatives of both parties inyolved. Therefore, in case of a strike, the first thing to be done is to try conciliation that is, to get the two parties to come to an agreement voluntarily, without any opinion being expressed on the merits or any instructions being given. When this fails. then should the dispute be settled by arbitration. As to the board of arbitration, the Royal Commission on strikes, in its report, published by the goyernment of New South Wales, advises a representative one; that is one consisting of a chairman, appointed by the governor of the state, and of an equal number of representatives chosen by each party involved. There may be some discussion as to the method of appointng the arbitrators but at least is advisable, as was well shown in the quiet settlement of the recent Great Northern strike.

But the day of successful strikes is past. Every strike of late years has caused a great loss to both employers and employes than the direct gain to the successful party. Therefore great consideration should be given to the "labor problem" and by securing to laborits due deprive it of all excuse for aggression. Then strikes being done away with and the old wall of enmity battered down, capital and labor, by acting in concord, will secure, for each other, better results, and the laboring man, will enjov an era of greater prosperity.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 15, 1894

President Cleveland's health is once more the test upon which the Washington exaggerators are preaching the same old sermons. He called in a doctor this week because of a little trouble with his stomach, such as most of us are liable to have at this season, and the doctor told him to keep quiet for a few days. That is the whole unadorned story. He has not stopped transacting business for a single day. He ouly cut down the amount of work he usually does for a day or two, in order to comply with the doctor's orders, and he is now all right again; but the sermons will be kept up until a uew text is found.

Recognizing the fact that the democratic Senators had about exhausted their stock of patience and were about to force matters, Senator Aldrich, on behalf of the republican Senators, proposed to Senator Harris that Monday, June 25, be set as the date for takIng the final vote on the tariff bill. Senator Harris declined to accept, because he is satisfied that a vote can be reached before that date, or certainly not later, with out any agreement.

The income tax is the only thing remaining to be disposed of that is likely to consume much time. Senator Hill will make a long speech against it, but, like the rest of the bill it cannot be defeated because the votes to pass it have been pledged.

The delay of the Senate in passing the tariff bill will make it necessary to pass a joint resolution extending the appropriation bills for the current fiscal year into the new one that begins July 1, as not a single one of the regular appropriation bills has been touched bp the Senate, although eight of them have been passed by the house and the rest of them could be disposed of in the next two weeks if the Senate was ready for them.

Assistant Secretary Hamlin, of the Treasury department, has gone to the Pacific coast upon a somewhat peculiar errand. For some years there have been constant scandals in connection with the administration of the customs service in that section, and, according to the reports of special agents sent out by the Treasury department, so powerful have the combinations engaged in smuggling opium, Chinese, etc., bebome that persons who dare oppose them or attempt to expose them are sued for libel in the local courts and practically driven from their homes by influances of the smugglers upon the working of the legal machinery. The reports of the special agents naye been of such an extraordinary nature that Secretary Carlisle, who was unable because of pressure of other business to go himself, reqvested Mr. Hamlin to go and make a through investigation. Should he find things as they have been reported to be steps will be taken that will teach some people a never to be forgotten lesson.

"I never exchanged a word with Mr. Cleveland or in his company in my life, and I have never seen the man." These were the words used by Mr. Havemeyer, the president of the sugar trust, when asked by Senator Gray, chairman of the Senate investigating committee, whether he had held a conversation on Mr. Benedict's yacht in the summer of 1892 with President Cleveland, as alleged by one of the newspaper correspondents who has been indicted by the Grand Jury. No denial could possibly be more convincing than that, although no denial was needed to convince the American people that Grover Cleveland had never been a party to a bargain with the sugar trust or any other trust or person. He owes to the fact that he never would make bargains in politics some of the most persistent personal enemies he has.

Mr. Havemeyer made another statement that democrats ought to paste in their hats to spring on republicans who accuse the democrats of favoring the sugar trust. He was asked what pront the sugar trust would make if the sugar schedule became a law. His reply was: "About one fourth of what we make under the Mc Kinley law." If taking away three-fourths of its profits can be called favoring the sugar trust the democratic party should not object to pleading guilty to the charge.

A sub-committee of five members of the House committee on Banking and Currency began work today, under special instructions from the committee, upon a bill providing for a comprehensiye system of currency and banking, an improvement upon the National banks. Although the subcommittee is directed to report this bill by the 27, inst., the committee does not expect it to be acted upon at this session. It merely desires to get it perfected and reported to the House, in order that it may be discussed by the people before the opening of the next session.

B. F. CHRISTLIEB AT HOME.

A Correction.

Yoor correspondent arrived safely in Minnesota on the 12th inst.; making few stops on his route homeward from California, namely: Ogden, Council Bluffs, and in Holt Co. Missouri. In Iowa and Missouri there seems to be a shortage of rain similar to the preseut conditions in Minnesota. Despite that fact crops seemed to be in a growing condition, In my communication published in the issue of the GAZETTE of the 8 th inst. I discovered an inadvertance which in some way crept in it makes me say that a portion of California is drained by Sierra Nevada and Coast Range Mountains. While there are many interesting objects in California your readers will hardly believe that water runs up hill there. I ment to describe that part of the state as an immense valley lying between the Sierra Nevada and Coast system of mountains and drained by the San Joaquin river.

It appears that Waverly will not celebrate the "Glorious Fourth" at home this year and that our citizens will have an opportunity to do so elsewhere.

Our ticket published in this department last has been quite generally commented on in this section. It is conceded by Democrats to be a very strong combination embracing candidates who are experts at vote getting, and men also who are known to every one as aboye reproach. ### INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

Then came the architect and craftsmen to lay the foundation of the Hennepin county temple the Babylonian Court House. The taxpayers of Hennepin county begin to feel themselves burden ridden in tax paying and think that such a building of a Court House for Hennepin county is a prodigal waste but in these latter days there seems to be no limit to extravagance; have heard more complaint of late about high taxes than for years before. The people begin to think it is time for retrenchment and reform.

Times do not seem to be improving any yet but it is hoped if we get a good crop it will help us out some.

We are needing rain very much for the growing crops, for the ground has become very dry.

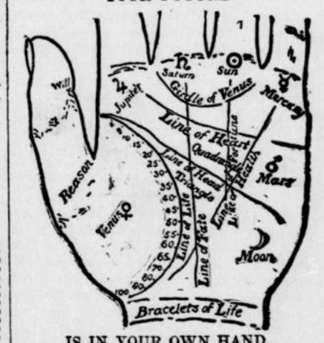
YOUR FUTURE



IS IN YOUR OWN HAND.

Palmistry assumes to tell what the lines in your hand indicate. It will amuse you, if nothing more. The above diagram almost explains itself. The length of the LINE OF LIFE indicates probable age to which you will live. Each BRACELET gives you thirty years. Well-marked LINE OF HEAD denotes brain power; clear LINE OF FORTUNE, fame or riches. Both combined mean success in life; but you must keep up with modern ideas to win it. You will find plenty of these in Demorest's Family Magazine, so attractively presented that every member of the family is entertained. It is a dozen magazines in one. A CLEAR LINE OF HEART bespeaks tenderness; a straight LINE OF FATE, peaceful life; the reverse if crooked. A well-defined LINE OF HEALTH spares you doctors' bills; so will the health hints in Demorest's. No other magazine publishes so many stories to interest the home circle. You will be subject to extremes of high spirits or despondency if you have the GIRDLE OF VENUS well marked; keep up your spirits by having Demorest's Magazine to read. By subscribing to it for 1894 you will receive a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides the superb premium picture, 17x22 inches, "I'm a Daisy!" which is almost a real baby, and equal to the original oil painting which cost $300; and you will have a magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep you posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads, and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and you get with it, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2.00, and you will really get over $25.00 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send for a specimen copy. A large QUADRANGLE means honesty; a large TRIANGLE, generosity; long FIRST DIVISION OF THUMB, strong will; LONG SECOND DIVISION, reasoning faculty. The MOUNT OF JUPITER betokens ambition; that of SATURN, prudence; the SUN, love of splendor; MARS, coarse; MOON, imagination; VENUS, love of pleasure; and MERCURY, intelligence. THE first letter envelope dates back to May, 1696. It is now in the British museum, London.

IT is rumored that a gasoline and gas stove combine is to be organized to control the industries. Now all we need is some one to control the hired girl who operates them.

AFTER the 1st of next September it will be a misdemeanor in New York to furnish information concerning persons or corporations to newspaper representatives which if published, would be libelous.

MARK TWAIN is making good use of his two-thousand-year-old jumping-frog story in his after-dinner speeches in England. The English like to have the gentle hand of time laid upon their wine and their jokes.

JOHN L. SULLIVAN, who but recently was the idol of the sporting world, has fallen so low that there are none so poor as to do him reverence. The other night a physician in Boston, who was insulted by the ex-champion, laid his cheek open by a blow with a beer bottle, and Sully had to be taken to the hospital for repairs.

A SOCIETY belle in Vermont was recently married to a colored hotel porter in Saratoga. In cases of this kind the woman is always a "leading society belle" and the groom invariably "has thousands of dollars." They are never in ordinary circumstances. If they were the correspondent would be unable to weave a romance out of the incident.

THE Chicago council passed over the mayor's veto an ordinance prohibiting the sale within the city limits of cigarettes containing opium, morphine, jimson weed or belladonna. The traffic in cigarettes containing garlic, hasheesh, creosote, iodine, cabbage, mullein, scrap leather, asafetida, hay, onion tops, yarn and hair of the dog will continue as before.

THERE are only four survivors of Napoleon's grand army, the oldest of them being Jean Jacques Sabatier, who was born April 15, 1792. The others are 101 and 100 years old. They are all said to be as hearty and vigorous as could be expected of men who have lived eighty-two years since they suffered the hardships of one of the most terrible retreats in the history of warfare.

THE large return tide of Scandinavian emigration from this country to the peninsular kingdoms is exciting remark. The race is frugal and industrious, and a few years' residence in the United States enables many of them to accumulate enough to maintain themselves in affluence in their old homes, where the cost of living is low. They can live like princes there upon what would be regarded here as barely a competence.

IT takes half a lifetime to learn how to do anything perfectly. Few know how to inhale the perfume of a flower. The idea should be to capture "the fine fugitive first of all" aroma by the slightest and most delicate possible inhalation. If you jam your nose down into the flower you miss the essential attar and get a rank smell of the petals or leaves, a very different thing from the fragrance secreted by the glands at the base of the stamens and pistils.

IT seems almost incredible to the present generation that slavery once existed in Connecticut. The fact, however, is recalled to memory by the recent death at New Haven of an old negress who in 1825 was sold at public auction in that city. Slavery was abolished in that state shortly afterwards, but the majority of the slave owners, with true Yankee shrewdness, had disposed of their chattels to southern planters before the emancipation act went into effect.

DURING last year one hundred and thirteen murder charges were tried in Great Britain, of which twenty-one were child murder. In thirty cases verdicts of willful murder were returned; in twenty cases the defendants were found not guilty; in fourteen the accused were found to be insane, and in the remainder verdicts of manslaughter in various degrees were returned. The number of charges of willful murder were more than double the number in the preceding year, and the number of convictions was also nearly double.

ESPATERO, the matador, or bullfighter, who was gored to death under shadows of the Spanish capital has served as an illustration of the degeneracy of modern Spain. The church lent solemnity to the occasion by being represented by a priest who administered the last rites to the dying, while other matadors knelt down in gory dust. After these ceremonies were over the fighting in the ring was resumed. Spain is in need not only of missionaries, but of cizilizers. The Moors who were driven out could have made more out of Spain than the race that now inhabits that land.

THE death of Muley Hassan, sultan of Morocco, at the hands of some of the personal attendants of his son is an instance of poetic retribution which is but infrequently paralleled. Muley's succession to the throne upon the death of his father was attended by the mysterious disappearance of several of his near male relatives, and the first years of his reign were marked by the removals of all his kinsmen who might by any possibility become leaders opposed to the imperial will or policy. Muley Hassan is succeeded by his son, Muley Abdul Aziz, who is said to be a fanatical, cruel, ignorant semi-barbarian.

THE decision by a Chicago judge in regard to so-called decoy letters may necessitate a thorough revision of the methods used by post office detectives to catch thieves. The court ruled that a letter dropped into the post office by one officer of the government and received inside by another, by previous arrangement, is not a mailed letter according to the statute. Though inside the office, and in the hands of an officer appointed to receive it, the letter was not "in the mail" at the time it was alleged to have been taken by the carrier who was under suspicion. Hence the carrier was proven not guilt.

The Ex-Minister to Germany Succumbs After a Long Illness.

NEW YORK, June 19.—William Walter Phelps, the distinguished statesman and diplomat, died Sunday morning at 1:45 o'clock at his summer residence, Tea Neck Grange, near Englewood, N. J. He had been unconscious for many hours, and, in fact, practically for several days, even the arrival Saturday of his only daughter, Baroness von Rottenberg, from Berlin, not serving to arouse him. Death was caused by pneumonia, complicated with other diseases, chief among which was consumption. Two years ago, while minister to Berlin, he underwent a painful operation, from the effects of which he never recovered. At his bedside at the time of dissolution were his two sons and his daughter, together with his wife, who had been unremitting in her care of her husband for the last three weeks, from which time the dangerous period of his illness dates. ## THE INVESTIGATION ENDED.

Results of the Work of Senator Gray's Committee.

WASHINGTON, June 19.—On Saturday the examination of the senators was completed. Senator Gray was the only one that admitted that he had speculated in sugar. He said he had been dealing in stocks more or less all his life, and for the last twenty months had bought and sold sugar stocks. The day before the vote was taken he sold all he had at a loss, so that it could not be charged that it influenced his vote. He said that he had not been furnished with any information as to what the finance committee would do with the sugar schedule and that formed no part of his basis of purchase or sale. He saw no reason why a United States senator should not avail himself of a plain business proposition and he intended to transact any such business in the future as he had in the past.

A number of other senators were examined during the day, but none of them gave any testimony beyond the denial of the categorical questions concerning the purchase and ownership of sugar stocks or knowledge of any purchase by anyone connected with them either officially or domestically. The list includes Senators Gordon, Jones (Nev.), Kyle, McLaurin, Manderson, Mills, Mitchell (Wis.), Morrill, Murphy, Palmer, Pasco, Perkins, Platt, Proctor, Pugh, Roache, Sherman, Shoup, Squire, Stewart, Teller, Turpie, Vest, Morgan, Power, Vilas, Voorhees and White.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

A Big Mine.

It is undoubtedly a fact that the Mesaba mountain is the largest mine in existence today. This distinction was thought to belong to the Biwabik, but explorations that have just been completed have shown that property to be far behind. The Oliver Mining company, operating the mine, has been doing a large amount of test drilling lately and have sunk a drill hole over 400 feet in high grade ore, at which depth the drills broke, the bottom of the hole being still in the ore. The mine is about 600 feet wide and has been traced half a mile in length. The original owner of the mine, estimates that there are not less than 48,000,000 tons in sight, but half of this is enough to give the mine first place. The mine is on state land, and if there are 20,000,000 tons of ore the public schools of Minnesota will derive a revenue in the life of the lease of the property of $5,000,000. This lease runs about 17 years longer.

He brought with him $350,000 in Tennessee bonds, and made arrangements for the purchase of $313,000 in other state bonds. The total investment will be $830,000. Some of the bonds run as high as 5 per cent, and the whole investment is regarded as an unusually fortunate one.

The dog was shot.

A SONG OF NEW TIMES.

Old times will come no more,
However sweet and bright;
We've said good-by and shut the door
So still: "Good-by—good night!"

But new times
And true times,
The distant sky adorning,
Are bright times
And light times;
So bid new times good morning!

Old times will come no more,
With all their wrong or right;
There is a seal upon the door,
And we have said good night!

But new times—
God's true times,
His happiest skies adorning,
Are our times—
All flower-times;
So bid new times good morning!

ONE TWENTIETH OF MAY.

Why Miss Penny Has Cause to Remember It.

"Mother, do you reckon I'll have to give it up?"

Bessy set the iron down with a little sharp clink, and threw a sheet over the white dress she had been ironing with so much care.

"Well," said her mother, rubbing the shirt front to remove the last wriukle, "Sickness is sickness, and kiss is kiss, and duty is duty, and your pa hain't the man to set such things aside."

"Oh! I wish he would. I wish he wasn't such a good man. I wish he'd go to Charlotte in spite of everything!"

"Elizabeth Smith! What sorter talk is this? Now don't let me hear any more such chat; and you a church member at that."

Bessy's mother glared at her in horror. Bessy dropped into a chair and began to cry.

"I could give it all up but the fireworks. I can't give that up. And Senator Vance—oh! I did want to see him just once, and he is to speak, and they are to have him at the fireworks, and there are to be chrysanthemums all in fire, and rockets and things; and I want to go so badly!"

Bessy's mother felt very sorry for the child. Indeed, Bessy's disappointment hurt her as much as it did the girl. Bessy's tears fell thick and fast on the pretty white dress that lay limp and damp on the ironing-table. Her mother finished the shirt and hung it in the sun on the piazza. As she stood here, carefully straightening out the sleeves, a little smile crept about her withered lips.

"Bessy," she called, "don't set there mussin' up that white dress; make 'aste and iron it and then run over and see if Miss Penny haint agoin' to Charlotte to-morrow. If she is, why can't you go along?"

Bessy was soon busy with the tucks again.

"It's ironing just lovely, ma. I believe I shall look real nice. Why didn't we think of Miss Penny before?" When the dress was finished, Bessy tied on her sunbonnet and ran down the road to Miss Penny's. It was a lovely old place at times, but now it was a wonder of beauty, a very picture of roses. There was an arch over the gate and now it was a mass of pink and white roses. Great wreaths of them hung about the windows and the long piazza was smothered in them. There were great oak trees stretching friendly arms over the old house, but the roses seemed to love the cool shadows. Once Bessy had heard the minister say: "Miss Penny's roses bloom in spite of shadows." And Miss Penny had flushed a little, and Bessy was almost sure she had seen tears in her eyes. The girl wondered what was in that commonplace remark to make anyone cry.

Now, the place was very still. Butterflies glided through the rose-scented air. Humming birds poised above the sweet-scented roses, and bees hummed over the white-clover blossoms.

The front door stood open and Miss Penny was reading in the cool hall.

"Come in, Bessy. Why, how flushed you are. Did you walk so fast?"

Miss Penny set a rocking chair out of the draught and put the girl into it.

"I'm glad to see you, for, to tell the truth, I was just getting sleepy right here over a new magazine! So I needed you."

"Maybe you ought to have gone to sleep" Bessy said.

"Oh, no. I was only lazy, not tired, for this hasn't been a busy day. I really have done nothing worth speaking of. To be sure there was the ride around the farm this morning, but that is all."

"Miss Penny, I must tell you why I came. I want to go to Charlotte to-morrow. I never have been a twentieth in all my life, and pa promised me, and now Uncle Sam is sick and I can't go," and Bessy in spite of herself, began to cry.

"Why, how would you like to go with me?" Miss Penny asked. Dear Miss Penny. She hadn't even thought of the "First Declaration of Independence" which one of her ancestors had signed in Charlotte, N. C., May 20, 1775. And the notion of going to the annual celebration came to her with the thought that this little girl wanted to go.

"Oh, Miss Penny, may I? Shall I see Our Vance after all; and the fireworks? I'm so glad. Am I really going?"

"Certainly. I'll come by after you, and, since I think of it, tell your mother I'll take you to the hotel, so she need not prepare a lunch, and we won't come back till the next day. I never liked that late train."

Bessy went home with her heart full of joy, and her arms full of roses.

Miss Penny sat quietly watching her down the road. "I hope I shall not get sorry for it," she said. "The bees may swarm, and Fluff is almost sure to come off with those partridge cochens, and Mr. Sikes will bring the Jersey cow, and Martha is coming to make the upper bedrooms ready for the boarders, but I'll go anyhow. The child's face touched me. I was young once." And then Miss Penny's face grew sad, and her sweet mouth trembled a little, for she hadn't been a very happy girl. She was just about as old as Bessie when a great disappointment came to her. Charlie had gone away to work, and after awhile he wrote her that he was going to marry his employer's daughter. To be sure he had never been engaged to Miss Penny, but she thought—well, never mind what She had never gotten over the old dream, and now when she was no longer young the thought of it saddened her.

The morning came at last, and Bessy was seated beside Miss Penny in the cars.

"It will be nicer than going with pa," she said, her eyes shining.

Charlotte seemed a very large city to Bessy. She could hardly believe that New York itself was grander; and Miss Penny enjoyed the girl's pleasure.

"You'll show me Senator Vance, won't you, Miss Penny? I'm afraid I sha'n't know him by the picture at home."

"I think you will," Miss Penny said, and as she spoke there was a little stir at the door, and a great shout filled the auditorium. Bessy trembled with delight, and her eyes grew dark as she fixed them on the grand face of the man who walked quietly toward the rostrum. "I know him," she whispered; "it is Senator Vance."

Miss Penny nodded. "You are a real North Carolinian, little woman," an old man said, leaning over toward Bessy. "You can tell 'em by their worship of Zeb Vance; they all do it."

Miss Penny smiled, and Bessy wondered why the old man's eyes shone so. And then the great statesman stood before them, and Bessy lost herself.

Oh, what a day it was! She would never, so long as she lived, forget the dinner at the hotel; and she wondered how Miss Penny could go through it all so quietly, just for all the world as if she'd been at home. And then night came with the fireworks. Bessy fairly screamed with delight, and Miss Penny felt that she had lost nothing even if the bees did swarm and go away, and if Fluff should "come off" with her blue-blooded babies like any common hen with the most plebeian brood.

Mr. Sikes and Martha might well afford to suffer some disappointment if by doing so such happiness as this could be brought to a fellow mortal. The people were going home, many of them tired and cross, when Miss Penny started at the sound of a shrill, agonized scream.

"Some one is hurt, Bessy. Those horses—ah, there!"

Miss Penny gently unclasped Bessy's hands from her arm. "Keep close to me, dear, but do not hold me. See, there are only men about that child; I must do what I can."

The men fell back as she went forward. The light of many lanterns fell on the pale upturned face of a young girl. Miss Penny knelt beside her and helped the doctor in his efforts to restore consciousness.

Beside the doctor knelt another man, and Miss Penny knew he was the girl's father.

"Is she hurt—is she?" he was saying.

Somehow Miss Penny felt no surprise as she recognized the voice.

"She has opened her eyes, Charlie," Miss Penny said, quietly.

The man looked at the woman who was chafing his daughter's hands.

"I am glad you are here, Penny," was all he said. Later, at the hotel, she found the girl only slightly injured. Bessy was lying wide awake when Miss Penny came in.

"I came here to make you happy, Bessy, but I've found my own happiness when I thought it was lost forever," she said. And that was how it happened that Charlie Allen came to Miss Penny's farm with his daughter one bright summer day, and the minister who had spoken those commonplace words about Miss Penny's roses married them. Charlie Allen's daughter whispered to Bessy: "I know I shall love her as I did my own mother," and Miss Penny kissed Bessy and said, with a really pretty blush: "I'm not sorry I went with you 'to the twentieth,' Bessy."—Mary Wilson, in Arthur's Home Magazine.

Genuine Shamrock Wit.

The Hash Cycle club, of Michigan boulevard, is the name of it, and the members are the women boarders of the house. One of them is not yet an expert and goes out alone, or with a woman friend. They were out on Eighteenth street, near the massacre group where Calumet avenue makes as pretty a course as Hogarth could have drawn. The member of the Hash club was trying in vain to get the wheel and herself at the proper equipoise, but one or the other was constantly at fault, for every time the member tried to mount the wheel tried to get out of her way and succeeded. There was a Hibernian gardener near by, and the friend of the member of the Hash club suggested that they call the gardener to assist in the transaction. This was done. The good-natured fellow had doubtless seen many wheels—probably had one of his own once a week—but he had never been called to study one or give instructions about it. He made several attempts, however, and each time the wheel fell over, tearing the member entangled in her skirts. The Irishman, at last, weary of the undertaking, said:

"Well, be gob, it's the fir-rst toime I iver tuk hold o' wan or thim merry-go-rounds, an' it is me opinyan, mum, that the only safe way to ride wan is to get off and lade it, mum."

As an unadulterated specimen of shamrock wit this is worth framing.—Chicago Herald.

Amenities of Flat Life.

The lady in the flat overhead was making her first call on the lady who had moved in a few weeks before. They chatted about the weather and the merits of the apartment, and the conversation gradually drifted around to hardwood floors.

"They're lovely to look at," ventured the visitor, "but unless they're well covered with rugs they're a nuisance. The folks who live on the floor above me have a carpet-sweeper and a piano. When they're both performing at once it's rather hard on my nerves."

The new-comer saw her opportunity. She thought it might never come her way again; so she said, sweetly: "By the way, I wish you'd tell the gentleman who has the front bedroom that when he throws his shoes on the floor, just before retiring, it sounds to us as if he were playing nine pins."

The visiting lady straightened up, and the new-comer noticed that her fingers twitched nervously.

"The boys' rooms," she said, coldly, "are all on the east side of the house. The front room is my dressing-room."

The hostess suddenly decided that it was time to serve a little tea.—Chicago Record.

—The longer I live, the more it grieves me to see man, who occupies his supreme place for the very purpose of imposing his will upon nature, and freeing himself and his from an outrageous necessity—to see him taken up with some false notion, and doing just the opposite of what he wants to do; and then, because the whole bent of his mind is spoilt, bungling miserably over everything.—Goethe.

A KENTUCKY MIRACLE.

Judge John M. Rice Tells How He Was Cured of Rheumatism.

Crippled for Six Years with Sciatica in Its Worst Form—He Expected to Die But Was Saved in a Marvelous Manner.

[From the Covington, Ky., Post.]

The Hon. John M. Rice, of Louisa, Lawrence County, Kentucky, has for the past two years retired from active life as Criminal and Circuit Judge of the sixteenth Judicial District of Kentucky.

He has for many years served his native county and state in the legislature at Frankfort and at Washington, and, until his retirement was a noted figure in political and Judicial circles. The Judge is well known throughout the state and possesses the best qualites which go to make a Kentucky gentleman honored wherever he is known.

About six years ago the bodily troubles which finally caused his retirement at a time when his mental faculties were in the zenith of their strength, began their encroachment upon his naturally strong constitution. A few days ago a Kentucky Post reporter called upon Judge Rice, who in the following words related the history of the causes that led to his retirement. "It is just about six years since I had an attack of rheumatism, slight at first, but soon developing into Sciatic rheumatism, which began first with acute shooting pains in the hips, gradually extending downward to my feet.

"My condition became so bad that I eventually lost all power of my legs, and then the liver, kidneys and bladder and in fact, my whole system, became deranged. I tried the treatment of many physicians, but receiving no lasting benefit from them, I had recourse to patent remedies, trying one kind after another until I believe there were none I had not sampled.

"In 1888, attended by my son John, I went to Hot Springs, Ark. I was not much benefited by some months stay there when I returned home. My liver was actually dead, and a dull persistent pain in its region kept me on the rack all the time. In 1890 I was reappointed Circuit Judge, but it was impossible for me to give attention to my duties. In 1891, I went to the Silurian Springs, Waukesha, Wis. I stayed there some time, but without improvement.

"Again I returned home, this time feeling no hopes of recovery. The muscles of my limbs were now reduced by atrophy to mere strings. Sciatic pains tortured me terribly, but it was the disordered condition of my liver that was I felt gradually wearing my life away. Doctors gave me up, all kinds of remedies had been tried without avail, and there was nothing more for me to do but resign myself to fate.

"I lingered on in this condition sustained almost entirely by stimulants until April, 1893. One day John saw an account of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People in the Kentucky Post. This was something new, and as one more drug after so many others could not do so much harm, John prevailed upon me to try the Pink Pills. It was, I think, in the first week in May the pills arrived. I remember I was not expected to live for more than three or four days at the time. The effect of the Pills, however, was marvelous and I could soon eat heartily, a thing I had not done for years. The liver began almost instantaneously to perform its functions, and has done so ever since. Without doubt the pills saved my life and while I do not crave notoriety I cannot refuse to testify to their worth.

The reporter called upon Mr. Hughes, the Louisa druggist, who informed him that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have been very popular, since Judge Rice used them with such benefit. He mentioned several who have found relief in their use.

An analysis of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People shows that they contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female, and all diseases resulting from vitiated humors in the blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, (50 cents a box, or 6 boxes for $2.50—they are never sold in bulk or by the 100) by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

While the schoolgirl has, of course, a great many things to make her happy, there is no doubt that chewing-gum contributes as much as anything to her jawousness.

World's Fair Medals.

A good deal of disturbance has been created and some scolding has been indulged in by those who in the competitive exhibit of their goods at the World's Columbian Exposition won medals or diplomas and who now find by a strict construction of the law under which the prizes were awarded they are liable to imprisonment in the penitentiary if for the information of the public they publish pictures of the diplomas or medals which they have won.

The law as it stands was drawn at the suggestion of Director General Davis, who had no other idea in making the suggestion than the preventing of exhibitors who had won no distinction by their exhibits from claiming medals or diplomas, and thus deceiving the public. He had not a thought of depriving any honest and successful exhibitor of the full use and publicity of his advertisements of the medals and diplomas which the merits of his wares had gained.

But in drawing the law the mistake was made of depriving the prize-winner of whatever benefit his diploma might be to him in advertising his manufactures. He can have his diploma framed and hung up in his parlor and can keep his medal locked up in his safe to show to his friends, but nothing more. Such is, at least, the construction the attorney general puts on the law.

It is outrageous to impute any criminal intent to those who have used for advertising purposes the recognition their goods have won. Such use has followed each exposition that has been held, and it is right and proper that the public should know whose goods entitled their maker to such recognition. The crime, if there be any, is only the technical violation of a clause in a law which was put there through an error. It is quite likely that the law will be amended so that those who won prizes may let the world know it, giving such evidence of the fact as may fairly be demanded.—Chicago Record, May 24, '94.

Touching this matter, a neat circular has been issued by the Whitman Agricultural Co., of St. Louis. This Company received the World's Columbian Medal, the highest possible award, on baling presses and a total of twenty awards on other entries, but are of course, under the law, restrained from giving proper publicity to the fact.

Seldon Spencer, of Essex, Conn., has a hen which lately astonished him by laying an egg that weighs twenty ounces and measures eight and one-half inches in circumference.

There's a dog at Southwest Harbor, Me., which has trotted from Somesville to the Harbor and back, twelve miles a day, six days in the week, for four years. Thus he has traveled nearly 15,000 miles.

A cat owned by Daniel E. Rowe, of Belfast, Me., disappeared and was not seen for three weeks. It was finally found imprisoned in a lobster trap, in a very weak condition, where she is believed to have been all the time, without nourishment of any kind. She has now fully recovered.

WHERE IS THE CONSUMER?

His Rights Ignored by Protectionist Panderers to the Producer.

We were prepared for almost any result of the customary hysteries of the New York Press, but we hardly looked for it to stumble upon such an honest condemnation of protection as this:

"A tariff measure which discriminates against one section in favor of another, and which confers immense benefits upon a single interest at the expense of a whole people is not protection, but spoliation."

There never was a tariff measure conceived that failed to do this very thing. There never will be one, as long as one section differs from another in its natural adaptation to certain industries. The industry with the strongest pull gets the biggest protection and holds it until some other interest comes along and complains that it has been injured by the protection of the other. Then another attempt is made at an equal distribution of the stolen cheese, to be followed by more complaints, with the result that the average of protection is pushed higher and higher in the effort to satisfy all.

If there is such a thing as "genuine protection," under which, as the Press avers, "all American producers possess equal rights and enjoy equal privileges," what of the consumer? His very existence is forgotten. He is not so much as mentioned while those who despoil him are trying to divide the booty. And when an attempt is made to ease the crushing weight of taxation which rests upon his bending shoulders and to place a little of it upon the possessors of large incomes, a cry goes up that such a measure is communism and sectionalism.

There is no better answer to this folly and no better defense of the rights of the consumer than certain words of Hon. John Sherman, which were quoted without challenge no longer than last November by Hon. U. S. Hall, of Missouri, in a speech before the ways and means committee of the house as follows:

"The public mind is not yet prepared to apply the key of a genuine revenue reform. A few years of further experience will convince the whole body of our people that a system of national taxes which rests the whole burden of taxation on consumption, and not one cent on property and income, is intrinsically unjust. While the expenses of the national government are largely caused by the protection of property, it is but right to call on property to contribute to its payment. It will not do to say that each person consumes in proportion to his means. This is not true. Every one must see that the consumption of the rich does not bear the same relation to the consumption of the poor as the income of the rich does to the wages of the poor. As wealth accumulates, this injustice in the fundamental basis of our system will be felt and forced upon the attention of congress."

The injustice has been felt, and the first attempt toward righting it finds arrayed in opposition all the forces of protection and privilege which have thrived upon it. It is denounced as "a fine upon thrift," a "confiscation of the savings of the industrious;" a something that will discourage economy. Does anyone who applies these epithets to it know of anybody who would not rather have an income of four thousand dollars a year, with a 2 per cent. tax on it, than not to have such an income to tax?—Louisville Courier-Journal.

DEMOCRATIC TARIFF POLICY.

Beneficial Reforms Obstructed by Protection-Fed Monopolists.

The consequences of nearly thirty years of robbery by protected monopolists are not easily overcome. The democratic party has a great and serious task. It has undertaken to reform the tariff and to turn back the principle of tariff legislation to the right method, the method that prevailed in framing the Walker tariff and the tariff of 1857. But it is met on the threshold of its reform work by a gigantic combination of interests that have been built up by the republicans who have taxed the people to enrich monopolists in consideration of generous contributions to campaign funds. Back of the men who have invested their wealth in industries for the sake of securing tariff bounties, who have bought laws and corrupted congresses and who are entitled to no sympathy, are thousands of innocent persons who must not be injured by sudden changes of laws.

It is a hard task, but the democratic party is making an effort to reform abuses. If the party could have its way, if it could be rid of some of its own burdens, it would make a decidedly stronger effort. As it is, the Wilson bill attempted to give the country cheaper clothes, cheaper fuel, cheaper homes, cheaper tools and a larger market for the products of the soil. In standing in the way of this effort the republicans and their allies are inviting much more radical legislation than has yet been attempted. The people have determined to be rid of the odious system which wrings millions of dollars from them through tariff taxes for the benefit of millionaires, and the democratic party is pledged to help them.

If there is too much resistance there may be more destruction than was contemplated. Carnegie, with his pockets bulging with the loot that had been stolen for him by the republican party, was the wisest protectionist of them all when he advised his accomplices to accept the Wilson bill.

There are men calling themselves democrats who hold and practice republican principles, but the heart and mind of the party are right, the real leaders of the party are right and the struggle against the system of protection, which is a struggle for larger human liberty and for less governmental paternalism, will be carried on by the democracy of the country. The republican party is the servant and slave of monopolists. It is built on ill-gained wealth. The democratic party is the party of the people and it will redeem its pledges to break down McKinleyism. What the democratic majority in the house accomplished in the face of republican power in the senate is a guarantee of the party's good faith. It may be obliged to go slow, but it will go in the right direction.—N. Y. World.

——In defiance of an overwhelming public opinion and of the latent sentiment in the republican party in favor of tariff revision the republican senators resist every effort to make the slightest reduction in the scale of duties. While they imagine that they are promoting the interests of party in severing the tariff-fed monopolies they are preparing for a repetition of the popular demonstrations of 1890 and 1892. Whether this reaction from the tariff panic of 1893 shall come this fall or two years hence may depend upon the degree of republican resistance to the present effort to enforce the popular will.—Philadelphia Record.

——After McKinley the deluge has long been a popular notion in Pennsylvania.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A BRIBERY SYSTEM.

The Corrupt Practices of High Tariff Advocates.

It is not at all strange that direct bribery has been attempted as one of the means to influence the votes of senators on the tariff bill.

Of course the attempts at bribery are directed against democratic senators. The votes of republican senators have been secure from the beginning against any change that would reduce the enormous rates of monopoly tariff taxation. Corrupt influences would be used, naturally, only to affect the action of democratic congressmen.

It was to be expected that, sooner or later, at some stage of the issue, the tariff corruptionists would offer directly to purchase votes.

The entire McKinley tariff system is bribery. Not a member of congress can vote to impose a high tariff tax for purposes of protection except from some motive of sordid selfishness and greed—corrupt political greed or greed for gain.

Protection bribes the popular vote. The farmer is bribed by the false promises of a nearer market and better prices for his products. Labor is bribed by false promises of higher wages. Commercial classes are bribed by false promises of flush times and big profits in trade.

The panic and wreck in financial affairs, in labor affairs and in agricultural affairs, show how false was the corrupt promise which the protectionists made to the people. The bribe that they offered was illusive. But the corruption was real.

The offer was like that of the being who promised "all the kingdoms of the world" for the service and worship of the person to whom the temptation was addressed. The being who made the offer could not fulfill one of its conditions. It was a false offer. But it was equally corrupt and criminal as if he could have paid the price which he had promised.

Experience shows that the prosperity promised by the protectionist is a disastrous illusion. The offered bribe was not a reality. But the corruption, the crime of the transaction, though the consideration failed, is the same. Failure to pay a bribe does not alleviate the guilt involved in a pledge of payment.

The entire process is a system of bribes by which votes are manufactured against such a tariff as the democratic party pledged its faith that it would give to the people. Nothing is more corrupt in the history of legislation than the acts of which the senatorial gamblers in trust certificates were guilty when they framed the sugar schedule after raking off their profits in buying and selling sugar secrenities.

The same impeachment holds in regard to every other feature of the tariff on which schedules have been manipulated by congressional dabblers in bucket-shop manipulation. — Chicago Herald.

TARIFF LIES BY REPUBLICANS.

The Real Cause of the Existing Industrial Stagnation.

The long tariff declaration by the Pennsylvania republicans is a string of unmitigated falshoods. It begins with the assertion that the "threats and efforts" of the democratic party "to destroy the system of protection to American industries have wrecked our manufacturing establishments, destroyed the value of our farm products, ruined our employers, beggared our workingmen, and brought distrust upon the honesty of their proposed legislation."

The democratic platform of 1892 was a "threat" to destroy protectionism and give the country a tariff for revenue only. On that platform the democratic party adminstered a tremendous whipping to the party of protectionism. Everybody, including all the protectees, expected the democratic party to make a long stride toward free trade and the utter demolition of protectionism. And yet the manufacturing beneficiaries of the tariff went on building factories and turning out products with hardly a pause for eight months after election. They did no diminish their output, and, strange to say, they did not reduce wages, as they did in many instances soon after the enactment of the McKinley tariff.

This one fact demonstrates that a radical reduction of the tariff had no terrors for them. It was not until the business public became profoundly alarmed at the impending consequences of republican silver legislation that the trouble began.

It was that accomplished legislation, and not the fear of tariff reduction, that started the panic and produced the results described with so much exaggeration by the Pennsylvania republicans. This was freely admitted for months after the panic began by leading republican organs and conspicuous beneficiaries of McKinleyism. It was a year after the election of 1892 before republican leaders and organs began to charge the consequences of the republican silver panic to fear of democratic tariff legislation.

As for the specifications in the Pennsylvania declaration—that the "democratic assault upon the American protective system" has "reduced to idleness two million workmen," and so on—they are sheer partisan lying of the most reckless description. They are a wild and desperate attempt to shift responsibility for the painful consequences of the republican silver panic from the republican to the democratic party. They are a futile attempt to make the people believe that the natural and necessary effects of actual republican legislation are the effects of democratic legislation not yet enacted, and which now promises to be strikingly like the republican legislation of 1861.—Chicago Herald.

—The scent of newmown hay fills the air this week in every direction. What a wonder some of Delano's fair daughters don't go out to the meadows and bottle up a lot for next winters use.

—Mr. A. E. Powell has gone into the business of cleaning and repairing organs. If you have an organ that needs cleaning, leave your order at this office and it will be promptly attended to.

—The contract for water works and electric lights we understand will be carried out by C. H. Kerrick. His new residence will, doubtless, be the first in town to exhibit the workings of the combined outfit.

—On Saturday the premises of John Marsollek, in Franklin were quarantined for diphtheria. His 13 year old daughter being down with it. John Gralla, of Independence was quarantined a few days previous to that time.

—On Wednesday fornoon Wesley Hall, of Lake Sarah, had a severe attack of Epistaxis. One of his sons drove to Delano in forty minutes, arriving at high noon, for assistant medical aid; but before his return the Fassett had been turned and the patient was better.

—We understand that our city fathers have profited by the recent discussion in the Minneapolis papers concerning water works: And have wisely concluded not to try the expensive and unsatisfactory filtering process for cleansing river water but to put in some wells and have water pure for all purposes. The GAZETTE of course claims some credit for agitating the question.

—The $300 dollars appropriate a few weeks ago by the county, for work on the Watertown road is being expended in tolerably good shape. But if the road bed were leveled a little before covering it with a foot of gravel for rods at a stretch the road would be level when it was finished; but where the leveling is neglected the inequalities are the same even though the gravel is a foot deep.

—On Sunday afternoon almost a fatal accident happened to Austin Coopers youngest son, at the Bain residence south of town. The little fellow asked for a drink of water, and while holding a large piece of candy in his mouth attemated to to drink, when he began to choke and grow black in the face. His mother with rare presence of mind, succeeded by means of her finger in extricating the chunk of candy, when he could again breath. So badly was his face congested as to rupture several capillaries, and blue spots of clotted blood were still visible Tuesday. A very close call.

—On Thursday the Town of Franklin sent on an exploring tour one of Delano's doctors, having learned of several cases of sore throat. The first place visited was Joe Mossang whose oldest boy Michael who had been at work on the road lately was found down with diptheria. At John Nelowajis the physician was informed that a boy had been sick but was well now, though a neighbor met him on the road a few minutes before with a rag around his neck had been told that he was sick. The father said he had no time for sickness, and refused to show the boy, claiming that he was not at home.

Irredeemable Money.

Mr. Pierrepont Morgan, the New York banker, says; "The paper money of France is the most striking fact in the world. It contains no promise for redemption. it is not a promise to pay, but a legal tender money which circulates freely in France and surrounding provinces of adjoining countries." Yes, and it is at "par with gold," has not "driven all gold out of the country," nor driven the country to a "silyer basis," nor done any of the many horrid things ordinarly attributid to "fiat money."—Farm Stock and Home.

Why not tell the whole story Bro. Owen? It is not the reason that the paper currency of France is "at par with gold etc." the fact is that France has $800,000,000 of gold reserve? If Mr. Morgan did not give that as the reason why the paper currency of France is so good, he did not know what he was talking about. France has about an equal quanity of silver and paper money in circulation, but not one dollar of fiat money because she has enough gold in the vaults of the Bank of France to redeem every dollar of her other currency in circulation.—The Aitkin Age.

Too Much Beer.

Special Telegram to the Tribune.

Anoka, Minn., June 18.—By complaint of prominent West Side citizens 20 young man and boys were brought befor Judge Fitch, of the municipal court, and fined $1.50 and costs for disorderly conduct on the street Saturday night. The gang were injoying themselves with a keg of beer.

County Cullings.

A call has been issued for a meeting to be held at Cokato, Saturday, June 23rd to discuss the advisibility of organizing a Farmer's National Union at that place.

The M. E. campmeeting at Montrose which closed Wednesday morning was quite a success. On Sunday a large crowd was psesent. Many from a distance, and listened to the grand sermon by the Rev. J. W. Powell, Sen. Mr. P. makes one think of what he has read about the days of Peter Cartright and others of his times.

Some one has mentioned Bill Ziebarth for chairman of the democratic county committe next time, as it has been reported that Bill Quinn would not accept again. Mr. Z. is well known over the county and is quite familiar with all the ropes, and a good deal worse man might be found, the Eagle to the contrary, notwithstanding.

Some of the republican organs of our county appear to be a leetle hard on Judge Elliot for going to Minneapolis last week and allowing those in attendance at court, at Buffalo to wait a day or so. We don't know what took the Judge home. It may have been a case of sweet heart. But as for the criticisms we think they rankle with politics.

Keep your eye out for caucus calls and notices of school meetings, Don't fail to be on hand at both an exercise your rights to vote as a free American citizen. This is just what makes our country free. When this is neglected things are run by a few political bums that do attend such places, for the money there is in it often, and our whole country begins to feel the absence of the masses at caucuses and meetings at home where they should always be on hand.

As the times draw nearer for the holding of conventions the symptoms of the nomination on the republican ticket of A. Y. Eaton grow stronger. He has a candidate from Wright, for clerk of the Supreme Court and advises voters to have a Wright County man on the state ticket or support a gooddemocrat. Of courae when Pidgeon fails to fly high enough to knock the persimmons, another Wright county man must try his luck, and the Duluth row over Congressman, is the Senator from Wright's chance and the Congressional plum must be Eaton. A. Y?

Binding Twine.

Henry Wolfer, warden of the penitentiary, at Stillwater has sent out a lot of samples of the prison made binding twine. The twine is of hemp, grown in Minnesota, Iowa and Kentucky, mostly. Mr. Wolfer says:

"This twine will be sold the present season at a price not to exceed 7 cents per pound, and lower, if necessary, to meet competition of any twine of any length and quality that may be placed on the market, said price to be finally determined by the Board of Managers June 1, 1894. All the purchasers of twine previous to that date will be entitled to the benefit of any reductions below seven cents that may be made by the Board. There need, therefor, be no hesitancy in placing orders now, as the prices will be adjusted as above indicated." Farmers who will need twine this fall, if they like the twine, will do well to place their orders in time. Call and get a sample at the GAZETTE office. We haye a full ball for examination. 26tf

As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO.

OLD GLORY.

BY THOMAS J. DUGGAN.

Old Glory! Flag of Liberty!
In triumph wave o'er land and sea,
The pride of millions yet to be,
'Neath Freedom's glorious sway;
We gaze upon each stary fold
In beauty to the skies unrolled,
And link with thee in pride untold
Our land, America.

CHORUS—Unfurl thy grandeur to the stars,
Dear flag of many battle scars,
Renowned in hallowed story;
All hail to thee, O emblem grand,
The guardian of our native land,
Old Glory!

Old Glory! founded by our sires
Amid the flame of battle fires,
Thy gleam the heart of all inspires
With rapture, day by day;
The flag of the new world art thou,
To tyranny thou ne'er shalt bow!
Forever wave above the brow
Of free America!—CHORUS

Old Glory! for thy honored past,
Our hearts revere thee till the last;
Our dearest hopes are on the cast,
To never fade away;
Triumphant, noble, brave and free,
Still onward shall thy progress be,
For honor, peace and liberty,
And for America!—CHORUS

M. CASIMIR-PERIER is the name of France's new President, chosen on Junz 27, by the two houses of the French Legislature. He received as the law directs a majority of all the votes cast. In this instance 451 out of 853 votes.

ANOTHER great strike is on. Again capital and labor are contesting for what they call rights. This time the A. R. U. and the Pullman Car Company started in to adjust difficulties. The members of the A. R. U. on the Northern Pacific, have been ordered out, and trains are still. This is said to be the greatest battle for rights between capital and labor yet had. 40,000 men, it is claimed, are now out on a strike.

PRESIDENT CARNOT, of France was struck down by the assassin's hand at Lyons, France, Sunday, June 24. The The murderer was an Italian anarchist. This kind of thing is growing too frequent. People will not stand idly by and see the men they have selected to administer their governments ruthlessly shot down in this way. It is said the crime was committed to avenge the death of a couple of anarchists recently executed.

A CYCLONE past over parts of Minnesota and the Dakotas on Wednesday night leaving death, suffering, and distruction to property in its wake. The list of dead in Minnesota so far as reported in this mornings Minneapolis Times is:

Charles Mitke, near Sleepy Eye.
Mr. Guldan, Maligan.
Mrs. G. T. Hicks, Pipestone.
Miss Jennie Lindstrom, of St. Paul at Darwin
Mrs. Sanders, Litchfield.
Baby Watcesky, at Glencoe.

Quiet a number were injurged some slightly and others severely. There seemes to have been several distinct stormes. Much dammage to property is reported.

Fusion Again.

Still some of our politicians are hinting at a fusion of the populist and Democratic tickets in our county. If the object is to still further disrupt the democratic party that is the very way to bring it about. It is possible, but hardly probable that such a fusion, including a few figure head candidates allowing the the republicans to choose their part of the ticket to be elected would give a democrat or two, and a populist or two, offices; but the entire ticket when elected, the combination concern would more than likely, result in a set of officers that would not be a credit to any community. We are not in favor of any such work. Wright county contains some democrats who are entitled to a straight, clean ticket, of their own from top to bottom; such a ticket as all honest men can support. Let them turn out to caucuses and send delegates to nominate it and then let all join in electing it.

FREE. FREE.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 22, 1894

"What can't be cured must be endured," is a homely adage that is about all the consolation that the adverage democrat can get out of the delay in the Senate in passing the tariff bill. Senator Harris, as the democratic leader has done all that one man can do, and he has been ably suported by some of the democratic Senators, but, unfortunately, not by all, and the margin is too small to force anything without a united support. Some of the democratic Senators seem to have an idea that when they pledged their votes to the bill they had performed their whole duty; as a consequence, here's another week gone and the final vote is not in sight, although it is difficult to see what excuse the republicans will have for prolonging the agony longer than next week. A democratic Senator remarked in my hearing today: "I don't believe the republicans will ever consent to have a vote taken on this bill until we compell them to do so," Whether this is true or not, I understand that it is the intention of nearly all the republicans to make long speeches on some portion of the bill next week. If that is allowed it a is very easy mathematical calculation to show the impossibility of passing the bill next week.

President Cleveland's little salt water trip did him a world of good. He returned looking like a new man; but the trouble with him is that he works just as hard in the debilitating weather of summer as he does in cold weather, and the natural consequence is that he soon runs down. He knows this just as well as anybody does, but he is so constituted that he cannot stop work unless he goes away from where the work is.

Speaker Crisp has been confined to his room the greater portion of this week with a stomach trouble. Representative Bailey, of Texas, made a great success as Speaker protem.

Commissioner Lochran, of the Pension Bureau, will turn over to Uncle Sam on the 30, inst., the snug little sum of $25,000,000 which by economical management of that bureau he has saved out of the amount his republican predecessor estimated would be necessary to pay pensions from July 1, 1893, to June 30, 1894. Republicans who believe in wasteful and extravagant expenditure of public money will be sure to denounce Judge Lochren for not having paid out every dollar appropriated, but sensible people who believe that public business should be conducted on the same principles which govern sccessful private establishments will be apt to say; "Well done, thou good and faithful seryant."

The Senate committee has about concluded its investigation of the sugar trust. It will hear no more witnesses, except the two or three Senators who have not, owing to their absence, yet been examined. It has already been made plain that the report will not be unanimous, the republicans being determined to try to make political capital out of the matter.

In order that no inconvenience may be caused by the failure of the regular appropriation bills to become laws by the first of July the House Appropriation committee has reported a joint resolution extending the appropriations for this year 30 days from July 1. This indicates that members of that committee are of the opinion that the appropriation bills can all be passed by the first of August. Democrats hope to have things in such shape that Congress can adjourn about that date.

It might be supposed that with the Senate meeting daily at 10 o'clock and not adjourning pefore 6, or half past, that Senator Faulkner, chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign committee, would be unable to find any time to devote to the work of the committee. But he does find lots of time. He spends something like an hour at committee headquarters every morning before the Senate meets and he returns in the evening as soon as he gets through his dinner and remains until 11 o'clock or later. Those who are familiar with the work he has already done pronounce him to be one of the most thorough organizers who ever directed the work of a campaign committee. Senator Faulkner is too experienced a political manager to discuss his plans in a newspaper, but it can be said without any violation of confidence that he is confident the democrats will control the House in the next Congress.

The House has again put its official endorsement on Representative Hatch's anti-option bill.

List of Patents.

COMMENCEMENT ORATION.

Farming and the Republic.

(E. M. CUNNINGHAM)

Before the year 1776 we were governed by foren kings, rulers who had very little interest in the colonies as long as they paid the excessive taxes levied upon them and levied under the tyranny placed over them.

They were not allowed to manufacture articles that were essential to their welfare and necessary in the various occupations of the time. The English did not know what was needed for the tilling of the soil, manufacturing and commerce in the western waters.

But after the sturdy patriots of 1776 had fought for liberty and won their independence, removing from over them dominance of foreign masters; after they had framed the constitution, that bit of law so short and so well defined and so dear to the American people; after they had returned to their homes they began to make rapid progress. Many began to manufacture; others led a seafaring life; but a greater number tilled the soil.

Since the close of the Revolutionary war the American people have made marvelous advancement and today we lead the world in manufacturing. Our merchantmen plow the briny deep in every part of this fair globe. The agriculturist claims the soil of the Mississippi valey. The western prairies are teeming with the flocks of the rancher. The Cordilleras are being rapidly brought to submission by the industry of the westerner. At present the scientists are studying to find a way to irrigate the American desert so as to have it yield a bounteous harvest.

But the farmer claims our attention because he is the principal element that has brought about this change, he will control the destiny of this republic. Agriculture, commerce, and manturing are the three chief industries that enrich a nation but the greatest of these is agriculture, for without its products the spindle can not turn and the ship will not sail. Agriculture is the conservative element in society and the guiding, restraining, controlling force that is beneficial to good government against storms of popular fury; against frenzied madmen, that seek collision with established order; against spirits of anarchy and rebellion against all laws that would seek the downfall of a nation, ever fostering good and moral laws that would tend to advance mankind, ever fostering any noble institution that cultivates understanding; ever fostering a pure and upright society, ithe American farmer has stood; stands to-day, and will always stand, as the shield and bulwark of this nation, himself the willing subject of law, and therefore its safest, truest, and strongest administrator, and its most patriotic defender.

The government of this republic is under the control of the farmers of the Mississippi valley. Fifty years ago it was a wilderness inhabited by skulking and treacherous savages, who did everything in their power to drive back the tide of imigration and the progressive advancement of civilization, but the soil was so fertlle, the land so inviting, the area so broad that the man of ambition, the man of bone and sinew, braving all the dangers in his front, paying no attention to the hardships that he must encounter, rushed on like an ocean tide, to the broad plains and rich acres that lie between the two mountain ranges of this continent. And in this short period of 50 years. This same valley contains 34,000,000 people, covering an area of 1,300,000 square miles, of over one half of the entire population of the United States, on ⅓ its area, never before in the history of the world, in the same length of time has there been greater progress. The pages of our census tables seems like a romance, the statistics of our progress dazzle the reader with their proportions and almost challenge his credulity at every column.

During all the depressions of trade, and commerce, and manufacturing in any period of our history, the agriculturist has steadily advanced in comfort, independence and self reliance. While thousands elsewhere have lacked employment and wanted bread in the last two years the tiller of the soil has never lacked the means of supporting himself and family, and not one of them have gone to bed hungry.

Self government among the owners of the soil in America is to-day an instinct, derived from our forefathers stamped in our own free natures, and where this is widely destributed good government is attained, good government is the rule.

The republican party may do miracles in governing this republic, the populist may become renouned for its achievements, and the democratic may go down into history and for its economies and its prosperous administration; but it the farm should fail, if the crops should be destroyed by disastrous storms, or by pests, or by drought; then, then you would see a crisis, a famine, greater in proportion than the crisis the democrats claim the republicans have caused, or which the republicans addict to the democrats, or which the populist claims as the fruit of both these parties mentioned.

But if every man does his duty to his country, if he becomes energetic in the affairs of state. We will maintain our position we hold to-day as the first of all nations and going forward in our occupations, under the emblem which contains thirteen bright stripes and fourty-four blazing stars, and our safety as a people watched by the sharp eyes of the American eagle, and warned of danger by its shrill cry, it is to-day and will be the proud exclamation of every man and women, every boy and girl. "I am proud that I am an American citizen."

CORRESPONENCE

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

The anniversary of our national Independence, 4th of July will be here in a few days. Where will we celebrate? We have many beautiful lakes, why not picnic at some of them; furnish our own music, and speaking too. It seems that patriotism has about died out in this country only on such occasions as the 4th of July. Think it is time the people had their spiritual strength renewed in the this direction. Money making and love of pleasure has gained the ascendency, rather than patriotism. The prophets say times will get no better for sometime to come yet and in fact it looks that way to most of us.

School closed in Dist. 102 last Friday, H. H. McLain teacher. And school district 79 and 102 joined in having a picnic on last Saturday.

Mrs. J. N. Moline is still on the sick list.

Hay making and rye haryest is here.

Most every farmer is cultivating corn now.

The politicions of our town are beginning to talk about caucuses and conventions.

Baker Bros. have a lumberyard at Maple Plain. JOHN H. MCGARY.

ROCKFORD RUMBLINGS.

Miss Jessie Florida accompanied by Mrs W. H. Hatch nee Florida arrived from Oak Park, Ill., to spend the Summer with the Florida family.

C. M. Johnson and Geo. F. Hatch visited the city Monday.

John Haggerty, of Annandale, visited his brother W. L. Haggerty over Sunday.

J. Benner's team took a lively run away from the station Wednesday morning. No damage done.

T. Benner visited Annandale last Sunday.

D. R. Thompson received a car load of material for side walks, for Rockford which is being laid as fast as possible, and which will add, greatly, to the appearance of the streets.

Miss Stanley who has been visiting Wm. Dorman's family returned to the city on Saturday.

Long Lake Links.

During the last month a lodge of Odd Fellows was organized in this village (I. O. O. F. No. 218.) with lodge room in Christlieb's store building. It has proved to be a progressive organization, increasing its membership from number necessary to secure a charter to 40 persons with a prospect of more being added in the near future.

A. H. Lawrence who has conducted a general store in our village during the last nine years has concluded an arrangement for the sale of his merchandise and buildings including grain elevator and feed mill to E. L. Brown and others. Mr. Lawrence intends removing to California. People of this community are loth to part with him as he has been an enterprising business man and a useful citizen.

Mrs. Griffin who is remaining with the family of D. W. Cook met with a peculiar accident on Thursday evening of last week. Mr. Cook being absent during the evening the woman became alarmed at some occurance about the premises, apprehending a stealthy attempt of some prowler or burglar to enter the dwelling, and in the excitement Mrs. Griffin seized a Winchester rifle, and in her unskilled hands the weapon discharged a bullet into the casting of a sewing machine and pieces of metal either of the bullet or casting glancing back struck Mrs. Griffin about the chest and face inflicting a painful but not a fatal wound in the upper part of the chest. It was likely a false alarm as far as burglars were concerned.

The testimonial concert given to Mr. J. V. O'Connor, Friday night, at the city hall was well attended and was a fitting tribute paid to one who so richly deserves this mark of esteem and respect as Mr. O'Connor was entitled to. Since Mr. O'Connor came to this town about a year ago he was a prominent figure in every social event of importance that occurred here, and always took an active part. During the time he has been here he was the leader of the band and the progress made by that organization under his tutorship is a credit not only to himself and the band but to the village also, who always feel proud of their band. Mr. O'Connor has been organist and leader of St. Mary's choir, and those who have attended high mass and vespers, can attest to his proficiency and the splendid progress made by the choir. Quite a number of popular young men of Marysville and a few from Waverly met some time ago and formed a literary and social club. It is purely nonsectarian, and is composed of young men of different religions and nationalities. Its object is to promote the study of general literature among its members and to hold periodically debates of the higher order. Their purposes are laudable and deserving of high commendation. With them all men are equal and to this motto they intend to faithfully adhere. Unlike the A. P. A., they, as decendants of one and the same first parents are determined to enjoy "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" as the American constitution guarantees to them. It is their endeavor to cherish as near as possible that brotherly spirit characteristic of one true family, convinced as they are from their knowledge of history that their forefathers fought and died alike with sword in hand defending the stars and stripes, it is their purpose to live as true, liberal American citizens, with malice towards no race or creed and charity towards all. Such is the motto of this new society, a typical example of true Americanism. It is intact from any thing that borders on religious fanaticism, each member is directed to follow undisturbed, his own religious and political convictions.

The politics of Morocco are much simpler than the politics of this country. We are told that the sultan was assassinated by friends of his son, and that his son is now the ruler. No primaries, no conventions, no machines, no ward bosses were necessary. The young man shot into office without question, and will probably hang on until his own son grows up.

LATER NEWS.

The Strike Is On.

Chicago, June 27.—The threatened strike to enforce the boycott of Pullman cars was inaugurated at 9 o'clock last night, when the American Railway union ordered the Illinois Central men out. The switchmen were the first to obey and quietly walked out, tying up the suburban as well as the express train service. The 9 o'clock train for St. Louis was allowed to pull out, as it was made up in the morning, before the boycott went into effect, but that train, the men asserted, was the last that would be allowed to leave until the Pullman strike is settled. The union men were quiet and orderly, but apparently determined to a man to maintain the boycott. The strike, it was asserted by an A. R. U. official, will extend immediately to five other roads, the Chicago, St. Paul & Kansas City, Wisconsin Central, Northern Pacific, Southern Pacific and the Santa Fe.

Two of the trains on the Illinois Central that were tied up at Grand Crossing, south of the city, were run out by a Central employe, who under police protection manipulated the necessary switches. A crowd of about 2,000 strikers and their friends gathered about the station and an extra detail of police was called to protect the switchman. No attempt was made to run suburban trains.

A train on the Savannah, Florida & Western was held up near Homerville, Ga., the morning of the 26th by six masked men. The express car was robbed of $1,222 in cash, but the mail and passenger cars were not molested. They escaped, but officers are on their track.

President of the French Republic Assassinated at Lyons.

His Murderer Refuses to Tell the Motive of His Awful Deed.

Plunged a Dagger Into His Victim's Body as He Rode in a Carriage.

The Famous Frenchman Does Not Long Survive His Wounds—His Career.

CARNOT CUT DOWN.

Lyons, June 25.—M. Sadi-Carnot, president of the French republic, is dead. He was struck down Sunday night by the hand of an assassin and died soon after midnight. The most intense excitement reigns throughout France.

The president was visiting Lyons in connection with the international exhibition. Upon his arrival here he was tendered a reception at the prefecture, after which he visited the exhibition. After spending some time there he proceeded to the Palais de Commerce, where a banquet was given in his honor.

At 9:25 President Carnot started for the theater, where a gala performance was to be given because of his presence in the city. Several carriages were in the procession, the first one being occupied by the president. M. Carnot's carriage was driven slowly along in front of the Palais de Commerce, and then turned into Rue de la Republique, still following the facade of the palace. When half way down the street, which was lined with enthusiastic crowds of people, who were loudly cheering, a man rushed out of the crowd and sprang upon the steps of the president's landau.

Just at this moment M. Carnot was waving his right hand and saluting with his hat in his left hand in response to the ovation that was being given him.

Saw the President Stabbed.

The people close to the carriage saw that the man standing on the step had a knife in his hand. By the glare of the electric lights they saw the bright blade gleam in the air as the assassin's arm descended, and President Carnot was seen to fall back in his seat, his face deathly pale. One of his hands was pressed over his heart where the steel had entered the body.

M. Rivaud, prefect of Lyons, who was seated beside M. Carnot, immediately struck the assassin a blow full in the face and knocked him from the step, thus preventing the man from again stabbing the president, which it was his evident intention to do.

The Assassin Captured.

Instantly cries of: "The president is assassinated!" "Death to the assassin!" were heard on every side, and the crowd in the vicinity of the carriage swelled to enormous proportions, every member seemingly intent upon killing the assassin. He was grasped by a dozen hands and his life would have then and there paid the forfeit of his crime had it not been for several sergeants de ville, who seized and attempted to draw him away from his captors.

This was found to be impossible, as the infuriated populace was determined to lynch the man and the efforts of the sergeants availed nothing beyond saving the man from instant death. Blows were aimed at his face and head, over the shoulders of the police, who had by this time received reinforcements, and many of the blows landed fairly. At last the police succeeded in driving the howling mob back a foot or so from the prisoner, but to get the captive through the crowd was a physical impossibility.

Troops Charge on the Crowd.

In the meantime the news of the attempted murder had spread with lightning-like rapidity and mounted guards were sent to the aid of the police, who were still struggling to preserve the life of the assassin. With drawn sabers in their hands the guards rode down into the crowd, heedless of whom their horses trampled upon. The crowd gave way before the horses and at last the center of the mob was reached.

Then a cordon was formed around the ten almost exhausted policemen and their captive and the march to the police station began. Even thus surrounded the prisoner was not safe, for men in the crowd made frantic endeavors to reach him. The guards repelled these attacks with the flat sides of their swords, while at the same time keeping watchful eyes upon the crowd to prevent the prisoner from being shot. Maledictions were hurled upon the captive, and never before has such wild indignation against a human being been seen in this city.

In the meantime physicians were hastily summoned to attend the president, who had almost immediately been conveyed to the prefecture. A careful examination was made of the wound and the doctors declared that the condition of M. Carnot was hopeless.

Sensation at the Theater.

The receipt of the news of the assassination caused a great sensation at the Grand theater, which was filled to the walls by the elite of Lyons. The theater presented a brilliant scene, the handsome toilets of the ladies being offset by the gay uniforms of the many military officers present. All were awaiting with impatience the arrival of the president and were unable to understand the delay. Suddenly a man entered the theater, crying at the top of his voice: "The president has been assasinated!"

The most intense excitement followed this abrupt announcement. Women screamed and several fainted. Many men, without waiting to secure their hats, ran out of the building in order to confirm the news. They found all the streets leading to the palace filled with excited throngs, and in a few minutes they were convinced that the report of the cowardly attempt upon the life of the president was true.

Suddenly through the throng sped a landau conveying Adrien Duppy, a brother of the prime minister, Deputy Chaudy and Prefect Rivaud, the crowd falling away before it as it dashed into the Rue de la Republique, preceded by four mounted gendarmes. The crowd thinking now that the report of the assassination was untrue and that the president was in the carriage shouted: "Vive Carnot," "Vive la Republique."

Cheers Turned to Curses.

The carriage was stopped and M. Chaudy and M. Rivaud, in tremulous voices, said: "Don't shout; the president has been the victim of an outrage."

The cheers were instantly turned to curses, and many and loud were the cries for vengeance.

The landau proceeded to the theater, where Rivaud and M. Chaudy went to the president's box. As soon as they were seen the whole audience arose and amid profound silence M. Rivaud said, in a voice broken with sobs: "The president has just been assassinated."

"Death to the Assassin."

This announcement was received with a terrible explosion of fury as the audience on the first report of the assassination had, though greatly excited, generally discredited it. The theater resounded with shouts of "A mort la assassin" and cries for vengence upon him.

When silence was in a measure restored M. Rivaud continued:

"In the Rue de la Republique a miscreant, under the pretext of presenting a petition, stabbed M. Carnot with a dagger."

M. Rivaud was again interrupted with shouts of "Death to the murderer!" "Revenge!" "Revenge!"

Waving his hand for silence M. Rivaud again spoke, saying:

"Do not make my mission more painful. We left M. Carnot in the hands of doctors. You understand that under these conditions our hearts are filled with sorrow, and that the proposed performance in the president's honor cannot take place."

The audience then left the building, many of them proceeding at once to the perfecture, where they stood in the streets waiting for any report that might be given out and discussing the crime that they considered had cast disgrace upon the fair fame of their city.

The assassin is an Italian named Cesare Giovanni Santo.

Work of the Doctors.

After examining the president's wound all the physicians in attenance upon him agreed that the operation was necessary, whereupon Dr. Ollier immediately probed the wound. While this was being done M. Carnot came to his senses, and said feebly but distinctly: "How you are hurting me." The doctors, however, continued to attend the wound, the outward bleeding of which had stopped. They knew though that the president's condition was extremely grave, as they more than suspected that internal hemorrhage had commenced. After M. Carnot had been taken from his carriage and placed upon a bed in the prefecture nobody but doctors and the officers of his military household who had accompanied him to Lyons were allowed to enter the room to which he had been carried.

The Assassin a Beardless Youth.

Santo, the assassin, is a beardless young man of 20 or 25 years old. When arrested he was attired in a brown suit and wore a peaked cap that matched the suit in color. As he marched, under his police guard, from the Rue de la Republique to the station, he held his head down, but his eyes glanced furtively around as though he was seeking an opportunity to escape from his captors. To have made such an attempt, however, would have been the height of foolhardiness unless he desired to commit suicide, for there is not the slightest doubt that had he got away from the protection of the police he would have been torn limb from limb by the crowd, whose every action showed that they were thirsting for his blood.

When the police party reached the Place des Cordeliers they were obliged to stop, while the landau in which were Gen. Borius, the prefect, the mayor and the wounded president, escorted by a detachment of mounted guards on a gallop, was driven rapidly past them en route to the prefecture. A second carriage conveying the officers of the president's military household followed close behind. An Associated Press reporter entered a third carriage, in which were M. Burdeau, ex-minister of finance, and Senator Millaud. On arrival at the prefecture Gen. Borius, the prefect, and the mayor alighted.

The Wounded Man's Removal.

President Carnot lay motionless and unconscious upon the cushions of the carriage. His eyes were closed. His waistcoat was unbuttoned and his shirt, on which the bright red cordon of the Legion of Honor was conspicuous, was covered on the left side, just over the heart, by a large blood stain, which extended to the hip. It was impossible to tell from his appearance whether he was dead or alive.

The crowd surged about in the vicinity of the carriage, but mounted guards and foot police held them in check some distance from the landau in which the president was lying. Many were the expressions of pity for the president and anger at his assassin.

Gen. Borius, the prefect, and the mayor, assisted by a number of attendants, lifted M. Carnot from the carriage and with difficulty carried him as tenderly as possible to a room on the first floor of the prefecture and laid him on a bed. Dr. Gailleton, who is mayor of Lyons, then examined the wound.

Died Soon After Midnight.

President Carnot died at 12:45 o'clock this morning. Shortly after midnight the archbishop of Lyons was summoned to the bedside of the dying president to administer to him the last rites of the church. He was in the room but a short time when he emerged and retired to an adjoining room. Here he remained until 12:30, when he was again summoned to the president's room, where he administered to him the sacrament.

M. Carnot remained conscious to the last. He realized that his life was rapidly ebbing away and twice he said: "Je m'en vais." Dr. Ponce leaned over the bed on which the president was lying and said to him: "Your friends are here, monsieur le president." M. Carnot replied: "I am grateful for their presence," and in less than a minute he gasped for breath, there was a convulsive shuddering of his body and the president of France was dead. Immediately after the death of M. Carnot Prime Minister Dupuy started on his return to Paris to officially announce the news to the senate and the chamber of deputies.

The bed on which M. Carnot died was of iron. It was placed between two windows of the palace. At its foot was the bed of honor which had been reserved for the president. The incision made by the doctors in order to stop the internal hemorrhage measured about 3 inches long by 2 inches wide.

Murderer Will Not Tell His Motive.

Santo, who speaks French badly, when questioned by Prefect Lepin at the police station in Rue Moliere, said he had lived at Cette, department of Herault, for the past six months, and had only come to Lyons Sunday. He gave his age as 22 years. His replies were given coolly, but without any sign of bravado. He refused, however, to answer any of the many questions put to him regarding his motive for stabbing the president, declaring that on this subject he would speak only before a tribunal. When he was searched by the police a book was found in one of his pockets in which it was written that he had been born in a village in the province of Milan, Italy.

Mobbed the Italians.

After M. Carnot had been taken to the prefecture it became generally known that his assassin was an Italian and the feeling of deep indignation among the crowd found vent in the form of attacks upon cafes kept by inoffensive natives of Italy. Three such places in the vicinity of the palace of commerce were totally wrecked by the infuriated mob. French flags, which were in abundance, were then procured by the crowd, and with cries of "Down with the foreigners," "Out with them," hundreds of men and boys marched to the Rue de la Barre, in which street the Italian consulate is situated. There is no doubt that the consulate would have been sacked had it not been for the prompt action of the police, who stopped the crowd and compelled its members to disperse.

All over the city threats are made to take summary vengeance upon the countrymen of Santo, and the authorities, fearing that attempts will be made to put these threats into effect, ordered bodies of cuirassiers to patrol the city to prevent any outbreak. Everywhere the troops are greeted with cries of "Long live the army."

After the attacks upon the Italian cafes the disorderly element among the crowds devoted their attention to the Italians whom they found upon the streets. Several of these men were pursued by the mob and barely escaped with their lives. The police, who were extraordinarily vigilant, had great difficulty in rescuing the hunted men. The Rue de la Barre is now barricaded at both ends and guarded by troops.

Grief of Mme. Carnot.

Paris, June 25.—Mme. Carnot accompanied by her two daughters, left this city at 1 o'clock this morning for Lyons. The news of the assassination of her husband was broken to her as tenderly as possible. She was almost prostrated with grief, but gave orders for preparations to be at once made to convey her to Lyons.

To Choose a New President.

Paris, June 25.—An official note has been issued calling upon the senate and chamber of deputies to assemble in congress at Versailles at 1 o'clock Wednesday afternoon for the purpose of electing a new president.

USEFUL AND BUSY LIFE.

Career of Marie Francois Sadi Carnot, President of France.

Marie Francois Sadi Carnot, who, December 3, 1887, succeeded Jules Grevy as president of the French republic, was considerably younger than any of his three predecesors, having been born in 1837 at Limoges. The son and grandson of most distinguished republican statesmen, he was brought up as a civil engineer and graduated with the highest honors at the Ecole polytechnique in 1857, and subsequently at the famous Ecole des Ponts et Chaussess in 1863. After having acted as government engineer in several provincial district he was in 1871 appointed prefect of the Seine department, which includes the civil governorship of Paris and its suburbs, and took a prominent part in organizing the national defense against the German invaders. A few months later he was elected by the Cote-d'Or district to represent them in the national assembly, and after taking his seat became the organizing secretary of the republican left party in the chamber. In 1876 he was elected by the inhabitants of the district of Beaune to represent their interests in parliament. In 1878 he was appointed under secretary of state for the ministry of public works. In 1880 he became minister of the same department in the cabinet of Jules Ferry. On the resignation of the latter in 1885 he was reappointed to the same ministry in Henri Brisson's cabinet, and on the resignation of M. Clamargerau a few months later he succeeded him as minister of finance, an office which he likewise held in the Goblet ministry.

On the retirement of President Grevy the two great republican orators, Ferry and Freycinet, were the principal candidates for the succession. In the first trial ballot of the republican senators and deputies on the morning of December 3, 1887, the former received 200 and the latter 193 votes, Brisson coming next with 81, and then Carnot with 69. The election of Ferry threatened to produce a popular disturbance, and Freycinet's supporters, when they saw that his chance was hopeless, decided to give their votes to Carnot. When the congress met in the afternoon Carnot received on the first ballot 303 votes; Ferry, 212; Gen. Saussier, 148; Freycinet, 76; Gen. Appert, 72; Brisson, 26, and other candidates, 31. Freycinet and Ferry then withdrew in favor of Carnot, who was elected on the second ballot by 616 votes, Gen. Saussier receiving from the conservatives 186.

President Carnot's widow is the daughter of Dupont White, who translated John Stuart Mill's works into French. Four children, all of whom are living, were the result of the union. One of two sons is in the French army and another represents a steamship company in Brazil.

M. Carnot's father, who was minister of public instruction in the republican government of 1848, and who, together with Gen. Cavaignac, refused to take the both of allegiance to Napoleon III. in 1851, was one of the most popular statesmen and distinguished scientists and authors in France. His grandfather also figured prominently in French history as one of the leading members of the convention in the great revolution of 1793.

Explosion in a Colliery—The Dead, It Is Thought, Will Number 250.

Cardiff, June 25.—A terrible explosion occurred here Saturday afternoon in the Albion colliery, near Pont-y-Pridd. Two hundred and sixty-eight miners were buried beneath the debris of the mine. Of this number but seventeen have so far been rescued. All hope for those still in the pit has been abandoned. The number of the dead will, it is believed, reach 250. Thus far 142 bodies have been taken from the pit.

[Bro. Jonathan, Loquitur.]

Hi! I'm a philistine, and wear my emotion
Somewhat on my sleeve, and betray my devotion
Profusely, no doubt, in a fashion bucolic,
With scarce any choice 'twixt a fight and a colic,
Whenever that banner up there is unfurled,
The flag of my country, the bloom o' the world!

It may be "bad form," or "provincial," or "fly,"
To wake up the dead on the Fourth of July
With cannons and firecrackers, trumpets and drums;
But the blood in my veins sort o' bubbles and hums
Whenever that banner up there is unfurled.
The flag of my country the bloom o' the world!

Forbid not the children, the girls and the boys;
Of such is the kingdom: go on with the noise!
It's good to be young, and it's good to be here
On the happiest day that comes in the year—
The day on which Freedom "Old Glory" unfurled,
The flag of my country, the bloom o' the world!

God bless the old fogy with fire in his eye
And a whoop in his throat for the Fourth of July!
I share his delight in a spread-eagle lingo,
And his cock-o'-the-walk sort o' patriot jingo
Whenever that banner up there is unfurled,
The flag of my country, the bloom o' the world!

It's all very well to be courteous and pleasant,
And praise other nations—when strangers are present;
But there's no use o' talking, it's in me to say:
We can lick all creation and rest half the day,
Whenever that banner up there is unfurled,
The flag of my country, the bloom o' the world!

Some folks that we've walloped need more of it yet,
To remind 'em of Yorktown, we'll say, or Chalmette,
To teach 'em good manners—a thing that they lack.
Is Kipling around? Well, I don't take it back
Just now, when the banner up there is unfurled,
The flag of my country, the bloom o' the world!

We keep open house, and we have the same word
Of welcome for peasant, or flunkey, or lord;
And we'd just as lief kick out a king as a tramp,
If he looks like a brute and behaves like a scamp,
Whenever that banner up there is unfurled
The flag of my country, the bloom o' the world!

If aliens don't think that our land is the best,
Let 'em take themselves back to their own and be blest;
Where they'll not have to look democrats in the eye,
Or see the bird soar on the Fourth of July,
What time that old banner up there is unfurled,
The flag of my country, the bloom o' the world!

For as long as time lasts, or while freemen survive
And swarm in our nation like bees in a hive,
We'll have our own way, and our way will be right;
And, a glory by day and a splendor by night,
That banner shall lead: it will never be furled,
The flag of my country, the bloom o' the world!

It's queer; but my eyes kind o' fill up with water,
And somehow my voice don't sound as clear as it ought to
When I think of the men and the days that are dead,
Of the wrongs that were borne and the blood that was shed
For the sake of that banner above us unfurled,
The flag of my country, the bloom o' the world!

Lawk! how I despise certain fellows I know,
Self-styled cosmopolites, in for a show
Of universality, looking so wise
And half making fun of our Fourth o' Julys;
And winking like apes when our banner's unfurled,
The flag of my country, the bloom o' the world!

I'd just like to stamp 'em down under my feet,
Or give 'em a whaling whenever we meet!
What are they fit for under the sun?
The thought of a battle would make 'em all run,
Desert the old banner that Freedom unfurled,
The flag of my country, the bloom o' the world!

Oh! yes, 'twould be useless for me to deny
That I'm kind o' worked up on the Fourth o' July,
And proud of our record and proud of our fame—
Well, yes, I am old: but you bet I be game
Whenever that banner up there is unfurled,
The flag of my country, the bloom o' the world!

Where's that declaration? Just read it once more,
Then wheel out the cannons, and let 'em all roar
For the precious old flag that our heroes have borne
In the tempests of battle, when hope was forlorn—
That banner of glory by Freedom unfurled,
The flag of my country, the bloom o' the world!

THE FOURTH AT JIMTOWN.

WHEN Gabe Harker at first broached the idea of a formal celebration of the Fourth of July at Jimtown little attention was paid to his words. The inhabitants of that rough mining camp cared no more for national holidays than for the Sabbath day, their one ruling ambition being to unearth the coveted grains of gold from the California soil. But Gabe insisted that the day should be properly celebrated, and so eloquently championed the idea that at last the rough gold diggers began to think of it, then talk of it, and at last express the wish that for once in her existence Jimtown would observe the day in a becoming manner.

"I am a Philydelphian bred an' born," said Gabe to a group of interested listeners "I've stood in the identical old Independence hall whar' Washington stood, I've sat in the identical chair in which he sat, I've laid this identical right hand on the old bell that fust pealed out the news that Yankee Doodle had knocked the chip off'n the shoulder o' Johnny Bull an' dared him to take it up, I've seed with these identical eyes the identical dockyment that declared we'd be forevermore free an' omnipotent, an' when a boy I have often peeled off an' gone in swimmin' in the identical water that was once used to make a pot o' Yankee tea out o' British material. My mother was a Darter o' the Revolution an' my father a continental soger, an' I was rocked in a cradle cut out o' the identical tree o' liberty. I say most emphatically that I'd be a traitor to my country if I didn't celybrate the day as she'd ort to be celybrated."

He ceased his patriotic speech and ground at his tobacco with an earnestness which indicated how deeply the loyal emotion, of his soul had been stirred.

"'S'posin' we should decide to celebrate," said Judge Ramsay, the justice of the peace, "w'at's your idee of how it should be did? W'at sort of a paterotic bill o' fare would you dish up for the occasion?"

"Music an' speeches, songs an' ringin' cheers, flags a flyin' an' salutes a shootin'. All the people congregate at one place, little an' big, red an' white, an' listen to the obsekies bestowed upon the day by our most eloquent orators, chief among whom are Judge Ramsay. I tell you, feller citizens, we kin grind out a celybration that'll shake these hills an' cause the air to trimble with paterotic chills an' fever."

The compliment paid to the judge's oratorical talent completely won him, and he followed Gabe's enthusiastic utterances with a speech that effectually settled the matter of a celebration. A meeting was called for that evening in front of the stage office, and, with a unanimity seldom observed in a public meeting, a programme was drawn up and unanimously adopted. From a time-stained page of that day I reproduce it:

The day will be ushered in by a unanimous salute at daybreak from all the guns and pistols in the camp.

8:00 A. M.—The people will assemble on Main street in front of the stage office, each carrying a small flag, if he's got any.

9:30 A. M.—Formation of the procession by Jim Bradley, marshal of the day; the right wing of the column to rest on the Golden Girl saloon.

10:00 A. M.—The order to proceed will be given, and the procession will march down Main street to the creek, up the creek past Sam Warren's cabin to Patterson's tent, thence north along the pack trail to where one-eyed Dick killed the Mexican, east to the speaker's stand, where the circus showed last year, back of the dance house.

PROGRAMME AT THE STAND.

1. Song—"My Country 'Tis of Thee," etc. Jack Abrams natural voice and Maj. Backus, bass.

2. There being no Declaration of Independence securable, Pete Craven will endeavor to read Washington's last address to his army from the Fourth Reader.

3. Tune on the banjo by Big Tom, accompanied by Aleck Davis, who will dance a jig.

4. Oration by his honor, Hon. Judge Ramsay, to which we invite unanimous attention. Subject: "The Day We Celebrate."

5. Addresses by such other distinguished speakers as the audience may desire to call upon for a few remarks.

After the conclusion of the platform proceedings the people will each disperse and pass the remainder of the day as he sees fit, and at 8 p. m. all will again congregate at Rocky Dave's, where a stag dance will be given free of charge. Those who desire to represent ladies will give their names to the master of ceremonies early in the evening and will be awarded badges to distinguish themselves from the sterner sex. Such persons are requested to act as ladylike as is possible under the circumstances. Any rude or unladylike conduct will result in taking away their badges and compelling him to take his place with the other sex.

The day was a glorious one. As the first gray streaks of dawn began to nose their way up the eastern horizon,

"THAT, FELLER CITIZENS, WAS THE FOURTH DAY O' JULY."

a roar from old man Jamison's army musket awoke the echoes and the denizens of the camp simultaneously, and soon the report of firearms accompanied by lusty yells could be heard on every hand. When the midsummer sun rose in regal splendor over the range to the eastward, its slanting rays lit up a most enlivening scene. The entire population of Jimtown and several adjacent camps had assembled on the main street, and a liberal display of flags on every hand lent color to the strange picture. And such flags! In those early days the red shirt was the most conspicuous part of male attire, and every partly worn shirt in the diggings and many that had not yet shown, a break had been sacrificed to serve as stripes in the roughly constructed emblems of liberty. The demand at the one general store of the camp for muslin of which to form the white stripes and the stars and to be dyed with indigo to serve as fields in which the stars could gleam was great, and the limited stock of that half-white, half-yellow unbleached material was soon exhausted. Gabe Harker, who as father of the celebration idea felt that the success of the day largely depended on his individual efforts, determined that a large flag should head the marching column, and his consternation can be imagined when he learned that not another shred of white material could be procured for love or gold dust. It had all been consumed in the manufacture of small individual flags.

But Gabe's bump of ingenuity was of true Yankee growth. There was but one woman in the camp, the wife of a pioneer who had dared the dangers of the plains in the early 50's and crossed from the states behind an ox team with her husband, and toward her cabin Gabe somewhat reluctantly bent his steps. To his embarrassment he found that her husband was absent at work in his claim, for it was through him that he intended to transact the business upon which he came. When told by the wife that the man was absent he contemplated retreat, but a realization of the great responsibilities which rested upon him nerved him to action, and he made known his errand.

He wanted to purchase a couple of her old white skirts to aid in the construction of the glorious stars and stripes.

To his intense delight she expressed her willingness to contribute that much to the cause of liberty. Nay, more. She had in her rag bag an old red flannel petticoat which had performed its mission and been retired, and if Gabe would furnish the thread she would not only contribute the material, but would cut out and make the flag. He muttered something about the spirit of the Daughters of the Revolution being yet alive and kicking, and hastened to the store to secure the thread and commend Mrs. Porter's patriotism to all whom he should chance to meet.

The matter of music greatly worried the committee of arrangements. The only musical instruments in the camp were Big Sam's banjo and an old battered brass tuba owned by a man who had once played in a band back in the states; and, although the tuba man volunteered to head the procession and do the very best he could, the committee, after considerable discussion, concluded the music might be rather flat without a drum, and as no drum could be secured the procession must march without music. The tuba man was engaged to play a bass accompaniment to Jack Abrams' and the major's opening song, and for several days practiced industriously on "My Country, 'Tis of Thee."

The parade was a success in every particular. The absence of music was scarcely observable, for the ringing cheers of the merry people as they marched through the town would have drowned the notes of any band of ordinary power. Mrs Porter, although not so young or handsome as the pictures we see of that noted character, marched at the head of the procession, representing the Goddess of Liberty, dressed in as gorgeous an array of stars and stripes as her limited supply of old skirts could produce. She was accorded royal honors, and marched with the haughty step of a queen.

The first number of the stand programme was announced, and Abrams and the major made a simultaneous bow which they had acquired only after the most careful practice. It took them but a few moments to properly pitch the tune, and then they broke forth in glad song, closely followed by the mellow notes of the tuba. The reading of the Fourth Reader selection by Pete Craven was very creditable in the light of his introductory statement that it had been several years since he had read anything, even a newspaper. The banjo solo was omitted for the reason that while tuning up Big Sam had broken the most important string on the instrument, and there was not another one in the camp.

Then came the event of the day, the oration by Judge Ramsay. That honored and honorable official stepped to the front of the platform in a deliberate manner, ran his left hand into the front of his vest, calmly and impressively surveyed the great audience in silence for a few moments and began:

"Feller Citizens: Had I the outgushing eloquence of a Apollo, the chain lightnin' tongue of a Mercury, the winnin' grace an' innocent unconsarn of a Venus standin' in quiet rumination on her adamantine base, I could not sufficiently accord my thanks to the wisely discriminating committee of honored citizens who selected me as the oratorical luminary of this conspicuous occasion. [Applause.] Hence I will repress my gratitude and proceed to my theme.

"The subjeck around which I shall try to twine the laurel wreaths of eloquence on this conspicuous occasion is one which would rouse the fires of paterotism in the quiverless breast of a marble statute, and cause its usually cold and silent lips to move in a burst of paterotic fervor. [Applause.] The Day We Celebrate. Gentlemen an' lady, my tongue falters w'en I contemplate the bottomless immensity of the theme and realize that, with the undying confidence you have ever reposed in me, you have entrusted it to my care. Can I do it justice? [Cries of 'Tackle it anyhow, judge.']

"Go back with me, Mrs. Porter an' gentlemen, to the first original origin of this day. The soil of this now extensively discovered country had never yet felt the passionate kiss of a white man's foot. At the base of Plymouth Rock a band of Injuns was camped. They arose one mornin', as had been their custom for years, an' prepared for the usual duties of the day. A warrior who had gone to the water's edge to wash his dusky face an' no less dusky hands suddenly disturbed the peaceful echoes with the startlin' cry: 'Sail, ho!'

"'Whereaway?' shouted the chief, in great agitation.

"'Thereaway,' he responded, pointing out over the breast of the discontented waves.

"Far out at sea a sail was discovered. Nearer and nearer it drew, visin' an' fallin' on the impatient waves, an' as it neared the shore the natives beheld with awe a lordly man in kingly dress lookin' through a telescope. Lady and gentlemen, that man was Columbus, and he was at that moment engaged in discovering America. The natives drew back in timid alarm as the vessel approached an' ground her prow into the sandy shore, and a moment later Columbus stepped ashore an' claimed this ge-lorious land an' planted in the sacred soil the great flag of freedom an' liberty, a counterpart of which is now afloatin' over us, thanks to the paterotic spirit of our beloved goddess, Mrs. Porter. [Wild applause.] That, feller citizens, was the Fourth day o' July, an' ever since that day has been one of rejoicin' over that fortunate discovery. Oh, feller citizens—"

"Beggin' the speaker's pardon," said Gabe Harker, who had gone down in the audience where he could better hear the judge, "but aren't you a little mixed in yer dates, yer honor? We do not celybrate the diskivery of America to-day, but the birth of the immortal Washington. We are here—"

"The court will not permit itself to be interrupted. It knows w'at it's talkin' about, an' if the cradle-rocked gentleman from Philadelphia is gropin' in blind ignorance, he should endeavor to suppress the fact an' set still an' try to learn somethin'."

"The gentleman from the cradle o' liberty is endeavorin' to throw some light on official ignorance. I tell you, sir, we celebrate the birth o' George Washington an' not the landin' o' Columbus an' the Pilgrim fathers. I know, fur my father fit under Washington."

"An' the court knows that the liberty brat doesn't know w'at it's talkin' about," the judge retorted. "We celebrate the diskivery of America. Ain't I right, Big Sam?"

Big Sam said he really didn't know, but he thought a judge ought to know more than a common miner.

"Of course he should," the judge continued, "an' if the offspring from a dug-out cradle interrupts me ag'in I'll jump down there an' teach him a lesson in paterotism."

"The one-hoss jedge of a half-hoss court can't teach me nothin'. If he comes down here I'll beat a hole in the ground with him."

The judge's coat came off like a flash, and he bounded from the platform. Gabe was waiting for him, and the two men came together like infuriated bulls. The excited crowd surged around the combatants with eager interest, some encouraging the child of liberty, while others urged the judicial light to greater efforts in defense of the honors he had accorded to Columbus. On and on they fought, kicking, biting, wrestling, striking, until at last the Philadelphian bore the judge to earth and jumped on his prostrate form with both feet. Then the bystanders interfered, and the defeated man, more dead than alive, was picked up in an unconscious condition and borne to his cabin.

While the dance was at its height that evening a sympathetic group stood around the rude bunk on which rested the demoralized form of the judge. Opening his swollen eyes the injured man feebly said:

"Boys, I reckon I got licked."

"Got it piled onto you in purty fair shape, jedge," one of his friends replied.

"I desarved it, boys, fur bein' so durned forgitful. My memory ain't pannin' out much good dust as I git older."

"Desarved it, jedge? Was you follerin' a blind lead in the Columbus business?"

"Yes. I reckon Gabe was right, an' I want you to explain to him that I won't lay this up ag'in him. I've been layin' here a thinkin' it over, an' now it all comes to me as plain as day. It was Christmas w'en Columbus discovered us, an' not the Fourth."

EFFECT OF ENVIRONMENT.

Powerful Influence of Napkins and Butter Knives and New Street Cars.

The proprietor of a restaurant which was cheap, but yet not a "beanery," had a certain lot of customers that he did not want. "They don't belong here; they are too tough. They ought to go to a Park row beanery to eat. How shall I get rid of them?" he asked.

"Put napkins and butter knives on the tables," was the answer of a wise man, "and if that doesn't send 'em, table cloths will, sure."

Napkins and butter knives proved to be enough.

Early morning travelers in the cars of the Third avenue street car line have recently seen another example of the effect of environment. During the year before the cable road was completed this company's old horse cars were getting into bad condition, and the worst looking of the cars were run in these early morning hours. To a man who went home by that line about four or five o'clock every morning it seemed as if the Bowery and Park row were getting more and more drunken and disorderly. Drunken parties boarded the old cars and had fun with the conductor and annoyed the other passengers. Windows were often smashed. The conductors had to pay for the broken glass, and sometimes they could coax the money out of the boisterous persons and sometimes not. It was unpleasant all around.

All of this changed at once with the advent of the handsome cable cars.

"What's become of your drunken people?" was asked recently of a conductor who had been a frequent sufferer.

"I don't know," he said. "The Bowery seems to have got sober all at once. They never get aboard nowadays, and I haven't had a cent's worth of damage done since the new cars began running."—N. Y. Sun.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

The New Capitol.

The instructions issued by the capitol commission to competing architects show a considerable increase in the size of the quarters of all state officers over the present ones, also provisions for some of the state boards and officials not now provided for. Provision will be made for seating 75 senators in the senate chamber, and for 150 in the house of representatives. The accommodation for the state library and the State Historical society will also be increased.

The building is to be fireproof throughout, and designed in accordance with approved modern methods of construction. The preference of the board is for a building, the exterior walls of which shall be faced with granite, but cost is a material consideration, and the designer is at liberty to designate the material which he proposes to use.

At least two elevators are to be provided, and the light, as far as possible, will be from the exterior. Mechanical means will be employed for ventilation and the heating plant will be located away from the building.

New Market for Lumber.

A market for lumber, entirely new to this section, and one that takes a grade of stuff different from any other eastern markets, has just been opened by one of the large lumber manufacturing companies of Duluth. The first sale, amounting to about 10,000,000 feet for delivery this season, has just been closed. This lumber goes direct from Duluth to the West Indies. It is taken, lake and canal, to New York, and then by vessel south, and the freight charge from Duluth amounts to about $100,000 on the entire deal. The same concern is now closing a large sale to go to South America.

DR. R. V. PIERCE: Dear Sir—In the fall of last year I suffered from rheumatism in my left shoulder and elbow. I tried a great many remedies, recommended to me by friends, but they all failed to afford relief. From the time I began Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, until I felt that I was cured, was a period covering four or five months. While the attack lasted, I suffered a great deal, and could not dress or undress myself. Although I am 73 years old, I now regard my health as splendid. I had spent a great deal of money previously, in various kinds of medicine, but the "Discovery," from the day I commenced until I was well, cost only FOUR DOLLARS.

DELANO DIARY

—I will be in my office July 4th to attend to acknowledging pension vouchers. M. A. O'HAIR.

—Among improvements lately made in Franklin, we note a fine red barn at John Matter's, and a granary at Peter Jaunich's.

—No services were held in the churches last Sunday on account of the prevalence of diphtheria, in the township and village.

—Since the saloons and Sunday base ball are running on Sundays the M. E. Church will open next Sunday at 10 A. M. J. W POWELL.

—On Wednesday evening a severe electric storm passed over this place. A good many branches of trees were broken off but no serious dammage done.

—Quarantine on the premises of John Languosch was raised this week. And the home of A. Nestroy was placed under quarentine, one boy having diphtheria. The baby also has it now.

—The Eagle and Waverly Tribune make an awful fuss over a recent game of base ball at Delano. It is no more than people generally expect from Sabbath breakers. You should not attend such things on Sunday, boys.

—Assessor Valentine Eppel reports the assessment valuation of taxes in the Village of Delano as follows;

|---|---|
| Real Estate Valuation, | $101,210.00 |
| Personel Property Valuation | 63,780.00 |
| Exempt, churches, school houses, | 35,000.00 |
| Total assessed valuation, | $199,990.00 |

—Uncle Joe Van Eman is talking of arresting the next clubs that play ball here on Sunday, for breaking the Sunday law. He says he is sorry to hear that even a few church members were present at the disgraceful affair.

—If our Board of Education intends to pay H. J. Kenning $25. for the use of his plans for the old school house to aid in adjusting the loss by fire would it not be better financiering and cost the district less if they would put up the money and guarantee the safe return of the plans than to fool away time and money telegraphing and trying to bulldoze him into sending them?

—The Delano Board of Education seem to have been paying premiums on $8,000.00 on the school building for some time; but now when the house is burned and they want the money they are obliged to leave it to a board of arbitration to say how much they shall take and call it square. There should be a law providing for settlement in full for amount insured to prevent little leaks like that. There is already talk that there will be no opportunity for builders to bid.

—On Tuesday, our Post Master, M. A. O'Hair received from J. J. Quinn on behalf of the Waverly base ball team, a draft for $10, as a forfeit that the club would be at Montrose next Sunday to meet the Delano Club, and asking that the latter put up a like amount as a forfeit; each club to add $15 more when they meet making $25 a side to be played for.

County Cullings.

Court adjourned last Saturday until July 16, when a few court cases will be tried.

The republicans are putting Frank E. Latham up for District Judge; but so far no democrat outside of Minneapolis appears in the field. Don't they want it?

We understand that Wednesday nights's storm tore down Mr. Hay's house, between Buffalo and Montrose. And that a man had his arm broken and was taken to Buffalo for treatment. It rained at Buffalo.

The 38th Legislative district is one of consequence. It is a large district and deserves to be represented by men who will be a credit to themselves and the district, men who will measure up with those of the districts in the state, and not a lot of electors for W. D. Washburne or any body else to the U. S. Senate.

Men who are members of all the secret societies in the county and are trying to hoist themselves to the front politically on this account are apt to fail, this season. Those who are currying favor with church people and the worldly minded at the same time will have up hill work. The time has arrived when voters demand that their candidates be men of stability of character, and not variable as the wind; that they be true and tried in principles and willing to do for the best for the majority, and not go about the county all things to all men; anything to get elected.

Politicians, in Wright county seem to be loosing their grip. It is about time. They are poor things to have in a community. People who expect to make enough out of politics at each election to aid in keeping them along for a couple of years would do themthemselves, and their county more good to drop out, and attend to their own business for a few years. People know tolerably well what they want, and if left to themselves will take some intsrest in getting what they want. But after visiting caucuses a few times and seeing how they run the average man who is not working for money, or drinks is apt to refrain from attending more; but quietly sits at home, and allows these fellows to nominate tickets they do not wish to have elected and then they help vote them down. Hence the impurity of politics. Let us have some plan for pure primaries.

Do It Yourself.

Keep your boys of the street! There is nothing that will more quickly demoralize a boy, says an exchange, than to give him his liberty and full power to loaf around depots and street corners. If you can't keep him busy at home, see that his leisure is spent with playmates who have not yet acquired the loafing habit. Let him run unrestrained and he will come home a few weeks hence with such a choice assortment of bad habits that you will wonder how it was possible he could learn them all in so short a time. Do not expect anyone else to look out for your boy; do it yourself.—Pope County Journal.

Hogs vs Children.

Stephen Paxton, the veteran missionary, tells a good story which shows how much more thought some persons devote to the care of their property than their family:

Asking a western settler how many children he had old enough to go to Sabath school, the man was confused, and began counting on his fingers. He miscounted and called out, "Kittie, come here, wife; name over the children while I count them for the stranger."

After some naming and counting he reported thirteen. Looking over the field Paxton saw a dove of hogs feeding in the clover. "How many hogs have you?" "Eighty-three," was the prompt response. There was no miscount there, nor need to count the hogs at all. His mind was on those hogs daily. One of his thirteen children might have wondered away, with small chances of being missed for some time, but if one of those eighty-three fine, fat hogs strayed away, he would be aware of it at once. It is not a bad sign when a man's mind is "on his children" at least as intently as on his hogs.—The Ram's Horn.

Woman's Column.

EDITED BY MRS. E. A. STACY.

The Central W. C. T. U. of Minneapolis sent out their first company of children for an outing of two weeks, at Paynesville, Minn., Last Friday under the charge of Mrs. R. I. Smith.

A boy of 14 years through the same outing committee has found a pleasant home with a farmer at Monticello for three months, and if all parties are satisfied he will remain longer. This outing work, this seeking to lessen the pains and burdens of life among the toilers and strugglers in our cities is a work that all can help and in helping others we are working together with God in this world for the uplifting and advancement of the human race. Perhaps we shall find at last in the day of final disclosure, if we have done our duty toward the children of want and proverty the hopeless little ones who have been hurled prematurely against the life wrenching problems of life and the homeless that the deepest and most far reaching influence that we ever exerted was the influence that we exerted over the helpless and neglected little children of the streets. Perhaps we shall find it the best work we ever accomplished. These opportunities of doing good to all around us.

Of 50,000 school children in England examined by the doctors, more than 30 percent were found suffering from physical or mental defects largely attributable, either directly or indirectly to the drinking habits of their parents. Who gave these parents liberty to start 15,000 children thus handi-capped in life?

Not a Thief.

He was not a bad-looking man, the prisoner at the bar.

Dissipation had left its mark, but there was something about his face that made you think that back in his young manhood were other and happier days. He was not raised a thief this man accused of stealing a diamond ring.

The court officials noticed the clear-cut features which might once have been handsome, the matted hair which once curled in beautiful ringlets, and said:

"The fellow is changed; prison life has done him good. When we got him he was the ugliest-looking fellow in jail; but since he has got the prison pallor he looks as if he might be an imitation of a gentleman."

Six months of enforced sobriety and good habits had certainly made a great change. Perhaps the jury noticed it, too. The ring was a valuable one and yet the scentence was for only one year.

"Prisoner, stand up!" said the judge when the foreman had handed in the verdict. "Have you any thing to say why the sentence of the Court should not be pronounced upon you?"

The prisoner slowly arose, and in deliberate tones replied:

"Your honor, I have something to say, and I will not tire you with my speech, I think. I have been a worthless, drunken vagabond, your honor, but I am not a thief. The ring which wag found in my pocket belonged to my mother, dead and in heaven years ago. It is better so. I wonder, your honor, if the angles know of the shame and disgrace of those they loved on earth?

"The lady identified the ring, but I believe that she was honestly mistaken The rings are probably similar. I stand before you to-day, your honor, the wreck of what was once a man; the urchins on the street jeer at me and laugh at my rags. I have been homeless and hungry, your honor, and would barter my soul for a glass of something warm to start the cold blood once more corusing through my veins. But I am not a thief.

"I would not harm God's weakest creature. As a boy I gathered the maimed and wounded animals from the street into the kitchen, and fed them as no man ever fed and cared for me. I was a happy boy. My father was wealthy and distinguished, my home luxurious. I went to college and graduated in honor, and soon afterwards, on the death of my father, I succeeded him in the practice of law. My mother died, and the property was mine. I was a rich man. Then came months of dissipation. My companions were like my self, possessed of ample fortunes. Our revels were the talk to the city, and we proud of the fact. We had none but the choicest wines, and I was glad when I could drink more than the others could stand: I thought it was a mark of manhood, your honor.

"It is the same old story. I will make it short. I became a common drunkard, my property was gone, everything but the ring. I could not part with that: it was the only link which bound me to a happy past, the only tie between me and the mother who bore me, who cared for me, who loved me. Many a night when I was cold and hungry I have taken it out beneath the glistening stars, and its sparkles were as if my mother's eyes were looking at me with the brightness which once was theirs. It was very dear to me. I was arrested while drunk, one night and the ring was taken from me; then the lady thought she recongnized it as one she had lost. But she is wrong, your honor. The ring is mine! I am a drunkard and a vagabond, but a thief—never!"

As he stoped speaking he drew a small paper package from his pocket. Where he got it no one knew; and before his hand could be arrested he had swallowed the contents. The lawyers jumped to their feet and seized the prisoner: a doctor was sent for; but before medical assistance could be obtained the prisoner was beyond human skill.

"Mother, I am not a thief,—I was only drunk," he muttered.

The door opened and a woman entered in great excitement.

"Judge, Judge, stop the trial! I have found my ring. He didn't steal it I was mistaken."

Too late The soul had taken its appeal to higher than all human courts.

Binding Twine.

Henry Wolfer, warden of the penitentiary, at Stillwater has sent out a lot of samples of the prison made binding twine. The twine is of hemp, grown in Minnesota, Iowa and Kentucky, mostly. Mr. Wolfer says:

"This twine will be sold the present season at a price not to exceed 7 cents per pound, and lower, if necessary, to meet competition of any twine of any length and quality that may be placed on the market, said price to be finally determined by the Board of Managers June 1, 1894. All the purchasers of twine previous to that date will be entitled to the benefit of any reductions below seven cents that may be made by the Board. There need, therefor, be no hesitancy in placing orders now, as the prices will be adjusted as above indicated." Farmers who will need twine this fall, if they like the twine, will do well to place their orders in time. Call and get a sample at the GAZETTE office. We have a full ball for examination. 26tf

"IN SOME WAY OR OTHER,"

"The Lord Will Provide."

In a rickety house, 'mid a garden of weeds
That flourished unhindered to scatter their seeds,
Where the cobwebs excluded the sweet light of morn,
A woman sat idly, in garments forlorn;
She looked at the holes in the rat-eaten floor,
And the rags, not too clean, that her little ones wore,
Then smoothed her torn wrapper and peacefully sighed:
"In some way or other the Lord will provide,"

Her husband sat out by the door in the shade,
With his head on his chair-back contentedly laid,
While the briars and weeds did his meadows adorn,
And the grass in his field was outstripping the corn,
Of rents (in his trousers) there sure was no lack,
And his coat was just ready to fall from his back,
But he calmly observed, when these facts he descried:
"In some way or other the Lord will provide."

"In some way or other," it may be, but sure
The Lord, although patient and long to endure,
Can scarce be expected to stall-feed the man
Who has not the gumption to do what he can;
And although He bequeaths us the fruits of the land,
And scatters his bounties on every hand,
He doesn't put bread ready-made on the shelf,
But even a chicken must scratch for himself.

And I think He is far better pleased with the folks
Who tackle life bravely and cheer it with jokes,
Who rustle and hustle the journey along,
And fill up the chinks with a laugh and a song,
Than with those who so solemnly sit themselves down,
In idleness waiting a robe and a crown,
And piously chant, as they drift with the tide,
"In some way or other the Lord will provide."

—Mortimer C. Brown.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 22, 1894

President Cleveland has decided to remain in Washington until the conference committee disposes of the tariff bill. So says private secretary Thurston, who ought to know if anybody does. The president thinks the conference will complete its work within ten days after it gets the bill, and that the bill will be sent to him for his signature by the 15, of July. Other democrats think it will require more than ten days to argue away the radical differences between the original Wilson bill and the numerous Senate amendments that have been made thereto, or to find by compromise some ground upon which both Senate and House will be willing to stand. It is difficult for a person who has not had experience with a Congressional conference committee to realize the time it takes to reconcile important differences. It is not only the personal opinions of the conferees that must be overcome. The jealousy between the House and Senate, which is as old as Congress, is always an important factor in the deliberations of a conference committed. In this case those who are disposes to be impatient should bear in mind that the Senate amendments number more than four hundred, each of which must be to a certain extent discussed by the conference committee, and voted upon, and the republicans on the committee will be certain to do all they can to retard an agreement, just as they have unnecessarily prolonged the debate upon the bill in the Senate, although they knew from the first, just as well as they do to-day that the bill would be passed.

The loss of a day by reason of adjournment as a mark of respect to the memory of the assassinated President of France will, unless present indications are at fault, prevent the passing of the tariff bill before next week.

It is well known that there are hundreds of employes of the government who are credited to democratic Congressional districts without the consent or knowledge of any democrat residing in the district and that many of them have never been within 500 miles of the places which are given upon the department books as their homes. Of course this is unjust to the residents of those districts who wish to enter the government service. They are met at the start with the statement that the quota of their state is full, while as a matter of fact it isn't fully; that is, not of bona fide residents. Democratic Congressmen have long been trying to get this wrong righted, and now success is in sight. Lists of all government employes credised to each of the states are to be furnished the Congressional delegations of those states, so that those who are improperly credited can be pointed out and removed from office, making room for an actual citizen of the state.

President Cleveland's nomination of Mr. Charles De Kay, literary editor of the New York Times, to be Consul General at Berlin was disappointing to a considerable number of democrats in both Senate and House who had endorsed working democrats for the place. But as Mr. De Kay is competent to fill the place and is said by his friends to have voted for president Cleveland it is not probabe that any attempt will be made to prevent his confirmation. Mr De Kay is a brother-in-law of Mr. R. W. Gilder, editor of the Century Magazine and it is supposed that it was Mr. Gilder who secured the place for him.

The democrats of the House redeemed the last of their pledges to the Territories by passing, this week, the bill for the admission of New Mexico as a state, the bills for the admission of Arizona and Utah having been passed months ago. There isn't much probability that either of these bills will be passed by the Senate at this session, as the regular appropriation bills have all to be acted upon, and everybody is anxious to adjourn at the earliest possible moment.

Coxey says he expects the democratic Congressional convention in his district to endorse his candidacy for Congress. Democrats here find this difficult to believe, and if the democrats in that district ask the adyice of the democratic Congressional Campaign committee, and heed it they will let Coxey and his candidacy severely alone.

The new Nicaragua Canal bill has been approved by the committee and favorably reported to the House. It provides the issue of $70,000,000 in 3 per for cent bonds to be used by the United States in the purchase of 70,000 shares of stock out of the 83,000 to be issued; for the purchase at a price not exceeding $4,500,000 of the interests of the present canal company, and for the construction of the canal by U. S. Engineers, under the direction of a board of eleven directors, eight of them to be appointed by the President.

COMMENCEMENT ORATION.

Universal Suffrage.

(BY EDWARD A. FREEMAN.)

In order that my subject may be clear to each one, it seems only proper that the term Universal Suffrage should be explained. Universal Suffrage simply means complete manhood suffrage, excluding idiots, insane, paupers and minors. It is exercised in Minnesota and nearly every state in the Union, and in some foreign countries among them Belgium and Greece.

When our forefathers left their mother country they had no idea of superiority over each other, and in the case of our Puritan fathers the notion of the equality of mankind had been taught to them in the parishes of England, this coupled with their poverty and misfortune, had a tendency to strengthen the bonds of social equality; so that immediately upon landing they drew up a compact among themselves in which they declared their loyalty to the Christian faith, and to their soverign and that they do covenant and combine themselves into a civil body politic for their bette the ordering and preservation, and to frame and enact such just and equal laws as would be convenient for the general good, this was the first germ of Universal suffrage.

The doctrine of the sovereignty of the people was the fundamental principal of nearly all colonies but as they were constrained to obey their soverigns it could not ostensibly disclose itself; neyertheless the doctrine spread secretly and on the opening of the Revolutionary war, that spark of universal equality which had been kindling in the breasts of the people nourished by their oppression and needs, burst into flame. The war itself though it caused great privation and and suffering had its purpose, it gave to us our civil liberty and served to unite the hearts of the people into a Union that was never to be broken, so that when the war was over that which had been a secret desire on the part of the people became a fact. From that time Universal Suffrage has grown and has become a universal law. But the question is this are we as a nation benefited by Universal suffrage or does any harm result to the government therefrom.

There never was a measure proposed by or for a people but what had its disadvantages as well as advantages. During the first few years of our "Independence" Universal Suffrage was almost a necessity, but now although it is believed by some to be a right by natural law still it is conceded that the true purpose for which a government exists is the general welfare of the nation and that it is, the prerogative of the state whether the suffrage shall be exercises by the many or the few. It is the intelligence and enlightenment of a country that the elective legislature should represent, and it is evident in any large extension of the suffrage, the intelligence of a constituency may be swamped by mere numerical majority.

Many methods have been proposed and are in effect to obviate this danger; in some states there is required a slight property qualification in others an understanding of the constitution. In Belgium they employ a system known as plural voting. As the non property holders and laboring class constitute almost the entire population of Belgium, in order that the property holders may have a voice in the government, each male inhabitant of voting age has one vote and the propertied class one to four votes according to the nature, location and amount of property. This method does not materially decrease the power of the common people as they so out-number their superiors, but although it may be a success there seems to be a greater opportunity for corruption than ever. What we want is a system that will embrace every one who understands government well enough to vote intelligently and will give the least opportunity for corruption in the ballot.

The liberty and purity loving men of our country have for many years been studying and inventing new means by which to protect the ballot. But in the end notwithstanding the methods in use to insure a pure vote the final appeal must be made to the public conscience. Montaigne says: "The essential principal of a republic is individual virtue." The character of a nation is formed by the character of the individuals composing the nation.

We boast of our greatness, and we as a nation, in a comparitavely short time, through the instrumentality of free institutions, have not only placed our country far in advance of all other nations, but as President Cleveland said at the dedication of the World's Fair: "We have made men who rule themselves." But whether this prescidence, which we have gained shall be for the future, depends upon to whom the ruling power is given. Carthage a city, that never knew a revolt for 600 years of her existence, a nation that controlled the commerce of the world and who boasted that no one dared wash his hands in the Mediterranean without her permission, was blotted out of existence by the cruel and insatiable avarice of the Romans. Then too Rome like Carthage fell but by her own venality and corruption. Thus we are taught that we as a nation are to determine what our future may be. If we give the controll of the government to individuals of virtue and character, we shall have a virtuous republic; a republic not only built upon the strong bulwarks of liberty but on the firm foundation of character.

Universal suffrage as we have it places all men on an equal footing. Wherein does this equality exist? Must the idler or ignorant one be compared to the industrious and intelligent citizen? Wherein does this equality exist?

Universal suffrage, and universal compulsary education should go hand in hand. Without the latter the former can never be a success. The country seems to demand that her constituency be as intelligent as possible; that the nation may be wise that her laws may be in keeping with the wants of the people. We admit it isthe wealth of our country that determines its position among nations, it was brains that acquired this wealth and now we want intelligence to judiciously handle the acquired wealth.

By requiring an educational qualification, it not only gives rise to a desire on the part of the people to acquire knowledge, but at the same time, to a more intelligent constituency. It is as reasonable to expect universal knowledge and good character as universal wealth for in spite of the many institutions for learning and influences for good, there is a certain class of individuals who presist in their ignorance and low character: Universal Suffrage includes such, and as has been said; there is great danger in the intellegence of a constituency being swamped in this case something should be done, for in order not to jeopardize the character and intellegence of a country the the character of the individual must be questioned. Justice should be measured out to the individual so as not to do injustice to the nation.

Universal Suffrage was first conceived by the common people but the wealthy were as anxious as the lower class for it. Maryland a State founded by rank was the first to adopt it. So it is evident that it was a universal desire on the part of the people, a desire which has come down to us more strongly than ever; for we have included in the suffrage of our state the foreigner who has been in our land but four months. Think of it. The alien who has been in our country but four short months, who know no more about our laws and institutions than a babe; he is placed on an equal with the natural born citizen, whose twenty-one years of residence and years of study are made equal to the foreigners four months residence and igornance. It is nedeless to dwell on this for it is a weekness on the part of the state; as naturalization is the gift of the nation so suffrage is the gift of the state.

Free institution and elective qulifications remind man that he is an important factor in the government; it imbues him with the spirit of patriotism.

The government of a democracy, says, "De Toqueville, Brings the notion of plitical rights to the humblest citizens." This he believes to be its greatest advantage.

And now lastly the expenditures of political parties must not be omitted. Legitimate expenses of political parties amounts to hundreds of thousands of dollars, these expenses are necessary but it is the secret service of political parties that needs be questioned; the hidden arts, the purchased votes, and the corrupt devices for cheating votes. The cost of this must not be counted in dollar but in final result which it leayes; it is payed for in the loss of moral courage and staminy and in tne demoralization of the public conscience It is asserted and affirmed that in a certain city in New York, of twenty-five hundred voters, eight hundred of this number were for sale. Yea, men even became so shameless that they organized to put up the price, "struck" as it were for more pay. This not only reveals the venality of the voters but of the still meaner men who taught these weaker ones to expect pay; in view of these distressing conditions. Prof. Cook of Cornell University advises certain electoral qualifications; "first, man must have fair education and a good moral character before becoming a voter, second, make the continaunce of the enjoyment of suffrage dependent on the sustaining of a good moral character; third, enact the best secret ballot law possible."

This subject should receive the widest and most considerate study of every true citizen. Each one should do his best to see that the suffrage of our country be composed of the best individuals, that voting may be held by the citizen as a duty sacred to the nation, and lastly that our government politically and every way may be such a perfect model as to be imitated by all other nations.

By reading over the items of the Mud Lake scribe, in the Cokato Commoner it leads one to believe that he is either an A. P. A. or an infidel so seems to be the case in regard to his feeling toward political parties and churches.

A few of our young men was in Annandale, Saturday, and on their way home tried to play drunk. Don't do that boys for we have seen the time that you did not need to pretend to be drunk; blaspheming is no credit to a person drunk or sober.

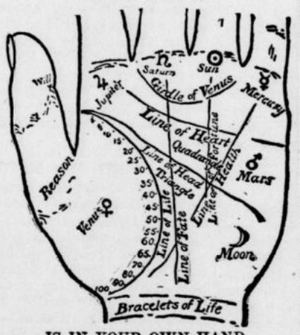
YOUR FUTURE



IS IN YOUR OWN HAND.

Palmistry assumes to tell what the lines in your hand indicate. It will amuse you, if nothing more. The above diagram almost explains itself. The length of the LINE OF LIFE indicates probable age to which you will live. Each BRACELET gives you thirty years. Well-marked LINE OF HEAD denotes brain power; clear LINE OF FORTUNE, fame or riches. Both combined mean success in life; but you must keep up with modern ideas to win it. You will find plenty of these in Demorest's Family Magazine, so attractively presented that every member of the family is entertained. It is a dozen magazines in one. A CLEAR LINE OF HEART bespeaks tenderness; a straight LINE OF FATE, peaceful life; the reverse if crooked. A well-defined LINE OF HEALTH spares you doctors' bills; so will the health hints in Demorest's. No other magazine publishes so many stories to interest the home circle. You will be subject to extremes of high spirits or despondency if you have the GIRDLE OF VENUS well marked; keep up your spirits by having Demorest's Magazine to read. By subscribing to it for 1894 you will receive a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides the superb premium picture, 17x21 inches, "I'm a Daisy!" which is almost a real baby, and equal to the original oil painting which cost $300; and you will have a magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep you posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads, and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and you get with it, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2.00, and you will really get over $25.00 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send for a specimen copy. A large QUADRANGLE means honesty; a large TRIANGLE, generosity; long FIRST DIVISION OF THUMB, strong will; LONG SECOND DIVISION, reasoning faculty. The MOUNT OF JUPITER betokens ambition; that of SATURN, prudence; the SUN, love of splendor; MARS, courage; MOON, imagination; VENUS, love of pleasure; and MERCURY, intelligence. Take our advice as above and you will be sure to possess the last and most valuable quality.

The woman who possesses this weapon generally rules by that fine instinct which strengthens her own position by strengthening her husband's. IT usually requires some great crime and sacrifice to arouse organized government to its own protection and the suppression of dangerous insubordination. The assassination of President Carnot, says the Detroit Free Press, should arouse civilization to the suppression of anarchy wherever it goes beyond the safety line in its self-assertion. This country has recently been submitting to more unpunished lawlessness than ever before in its history and it is now to be hoped that those vested with authority will crush the twin evils of anarchy and rebellion wherever they assert themselves.

LATER NEWS.

The Strike.

MINNEAPOLIS, July 2.—The strike situation grows more serious. The men at the Minnesota transfer were ordered out and they left at once. This will cause the shutting down of the mills, as they are dependent on the transfer for wheat and for cars to take the flour.

General Master Workman Sovereign at Des Moines, Io., issued an order to the Knights of Labor to boycott every person who patronized the Pullman company or rides on a Pullman car.

In Minnesota three roads are exempt from the trouble, viz.: The Duluth, Great Northern and the Soo line.

Four meetings were held here by engineers and firemen of the Northern Pacific, and while nothing definite is stated, it was given out that the engineers had decided to stay at work, even though they had to run with nonunion crews.

The Milwaukee continues to run its passenger trains through to Chicago with regularity, but no freight is moving. All of the men in the car shops have quit.

CHICAGO, July 2.—Seven leaders of the strikers were arrested last night and placed in jail. The prisoners are: Edward O'Neill, Charles Taylor, alias W. H. Taylor, John Duffy and Wm. McMullen—who were arrested at Hyde Park on a charge of knowingly and willfully obstructing train No. 23 of the Illinois Central railroad, and which carried the mails of the United States—and Frank McSorley, a fireman, O. B. Gusseno, also a fireman, and James Murlin, a switchman, and who are charged with knowingly and willfully obstructing a westbound train on the Rock Island road at Blue Island, which train carried mails of the United States.

The leaders of the union are confidently predicting that, within a week, unless a settlement of the trouble at issue has been effected in the meantime, every railroad in the United States, east as well as west, will be placed under as much of an embargo as are the roads leading out of Chicago this morning.

The representatives of the railroads, on the other hand, are equually emphatic in their declaratian that they are satisfied with the situation.

The Union stock yards at Chicago are completely tied up and 2,000 men employed in the slaughter houses were laid off the night of the 30th.

The federal troops at Ft. Sheridan, Ill., was notified to hold the 15th regiment of infantry in readiness to move. It is in command of Col. Crofton.

TIED UP.

Spread of the A. R. U.'s Strike Against Pullman.

It Grows at an Alarming Rate—Situation in Chicago—Strikers Record Their First Victory — Railroads Will Fight.

A GENERAL TIE-UP.

CHICAGO, June 28.—At 1 o'clock this morning the officials of the Illinois Central railroad gave out the information that their line from Chicago to New Orleans had been tied up by the secession of every switchman in their employ. All the towermen, switchtenders and switching engine crews in Chicago and suburbs struck at midnight.

When the switchmen and tenders went out a mob which soon grew from 500 to 2,000 switchmen, Pullman strikers and sympathizers, gathered at Grand Crossing and stopped all Illinois Central trains but one that attempted to pass. They also stopped the Pennsylvania trains. At 10 o'clock there were nine trains of the former road and six of the latter blockading the tracks centering at Grand Crossing. The switchmen say they have struck in sympathy with the Pullman strikers and in accordance with the plans of the American Rail way union.

More Roads Practically Tied Up.

CHICAGO, June 29.—Absolute and complete paralyzation of the railway traffic throughout the west was the condition of affairs that greeted President Debs and Vice President Howard, of the American Railway union, on their arrival at the union headquarters. If ever labor officials had reason to congratulate themselves upon the successful prosecution of a great railway battle, Messrs. Debs and Howard could compliment each other. Reports brought in from various committees showed that every road running out of Chicago—except the Rock Island and "Wagnerian" roads—is tied up. The list of roads affected by the boycott is:

Santa Fe, Northern Pacific, Southern Pacific, Western Indiana, Pan-Handle, Monon, Grand Trunk, Chicago & Erie, Illinois Central, Baltimore & Ohio, Chicago Great Western, Wisconsin Central, Cincinnati Southern, Northwestern.

The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul bore the first attack of the morning and the Chicago & Northwestern was wheeled into the line of "cripples." The Chicago & Alton, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and the Fort Wayne were also put on the strikers' lists. When the Panhandle started its trains into the city over the Fort Wayne tracks the switchmen on that road went out in a body. They were joined by the tower men, and it was reported that the whole system of the Fort Wayne terminals was tied up at 11 o'clock.

The shop men of the Illinois Central, 1,100 in number, left at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, saying they would not resume operations until the boycott was raised or the employing companies refused to handle Pullman cars.

Anti-Strikers.

Considerable feeling has been aroused among the colored people of this city by the action of the American Railway union convention, which drew the color line and barred negroes from the union while in session last week. A meeting of colored men was held and an organization known as the "Anti-Strikers' Railroad union" was formed. L. B. Stephens was elected president of the union and all other officers were also elected. It is the intention of this organization to fight the American Railway union, the president declares, and the members say they will take the places of members of the railway union should the latter go out on a strike.

Situation in Chicago.

Suburban service on the Illinois Central road was practically paralyzed all day Thursday as well as on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and other roads leaving the Dearborn station and the Grand Central. Mail trains entered and left Chicago with a near approach to regularity and no Pullman car was hindered. But the freight service of many roads was seriously endangered, many refusing to take any more perishable merchandise for shipment. The Northwestern and Illinois Central railways delivered all perishable goods, the officials in many cases acting as switch crews to aid in this work. The list of roads now affected is as follows.

Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, Northern Pacific, Southern Pacific, Chicago & Western Indiana (Belt Line), Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis (Pan-Handle), Louisville, New Albany & Chicago (Monon), Chicago & Grand Trunk, Chicago & Erie, Illinois Central, Baltimore & Ohio, Chicago Great Western (Maple Leaf), Wisconsin Central, Cincinnati Southern, Chicago & Northwestern, Chicago & Alton, Union Pacific, Denver & Rio Grande, Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, Chicago & Eastern Illinois, Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago, Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, Union Stock Yards & Transit company.

St. Paul Yields.

Every Pullman car on the line of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad was sidetracked by the management of the road Thursday and President Debs, of the American Railway union, marked down victory No. 1. When this action was taken the men of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul were on the point of striking, but as soon as the notice telling the American Railway union that the road had acceded to the demand that no Pullman car be hauled by the company was received at headquarters orders were sent to the employes to make up trains as usual, and do all in their power to aid the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul. In a short time the trains were moving out of the north end of the Union depot as though no Pullman boycott was in progress.

Mobile & Ohio Gives In.

Soon after the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul had given in a report was received at headquarters from St. Louis that the Mobile & Ohio railroad had given in and would sidetrack its Pullman cars. The two surrenders coming together raised the enthusiasm of the strikers to the highest pitch.

In the Far West.

Telegrams received by President Debs from towns all along the Northern Pacific and Santa Fe state that every man has quit work. No Pullman sleepers left Los Angeles nor San Diego. At Emporia and Birchfield Kan., all men on the Santa Fe are out. From Billings, Butte City, Missaula, Livingston, Duluth, Little Falls and Ellston come the same reports.

Pool Issues.

All the twenty-one lines enteriug Chicago, have agreed to pool issues and bear jointly the expenses of the strike, whether the road is affected or not. They declare they will fight the boycott to the bitter end.

Steamboats Profit by the Strike.

The strike on the railroads is diverting great quantities of freight to the steamboat lines which have rail connections on the other side of Lake Michigan. The Big Four turned all its freight for Cincinnati and the southeast to St. Joseph, and the Michgan Central diverted freight wherever possible to the lines touching at its points on the other side of the lake.

A Setback for the A. R. U.

CHICAGO, July 2.—The General Managers' association has announced that no striker would ever be employed by the road whose services he quits, and that all men refusing to perform their duties are to be instantly discharged and never reemployed.

The Illinois Central was driven back Friday night in the fight between the railroad companies and their striking employes. It telegraphed orders to its agent in Cairo to take the Pullman cars off one of the ten trains which were held there by the strikers and hurry it through to Chicago as fast as possible.

Considering the importance of the road; its admitted fighting qualities, the terrible pressure which the American Railroad union brought to bear on the entire system, and the bold front presented from the beginning by its general officers, the strikers claim that this order sent to Cairo is evidence that the road is weakening.

Debs received two setbacks during the day, one from the Order of Railway Conductors, who told him they had nothing in common with him and would not aid him in any way, and the other from the Switchmen's Mutual Aid association, which politely declined his offer to go "on strike" with him.

Station Baggagemen Strike.

The station baggagemen on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois, the Wabash, the Grand Trunk, Louisville, New Albany & Chicago, the Chicago & Erie, and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe roads, running into the Dearborn station, went out at noon.

Five Thousand Out at Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, June 30.—Fully 5,000 men are out here. The switchmen and other yard employes struck at 7 a. m. At 10 o'clock they were joined by the men in the yards at Ludlow, Covington and Newport across the river. No attempts are made to make up or move freights. Superintendents and office men are making up the passenger trains that go out.

Ten Mail Trains Held.

CAIRO, Ill., July 2.—Ten mail trains and one local passenger were on Saturday lying idle in the Illinois Central yards and three tons of United States mails were detained at the passenger depot.

IN CARNOT'S PLACE.

M. Casimir-Perier Elected to Succeed the Assassinated President.

PARIS, June 29.—M. Casimir-Perier, president of the chamber of deputies, was elected president of the third republic of France at the palace of Versailles by the congress of both houses of parliament. The national assembly consisting of the members of the senate and chamber of deputies, numbered 853, and Casimir-Perier received 451 votes on the first ballot. The result was announced amid great cheering and the new president was overwhelmed with congratulations, among the first to extend these being M. Dupuy, the premier. The scene was a very brilliant one. The election took place in the great hall or theater of the palace which has witnessed so many memorable events in the history of France under the republic, the Napoleons and the Bourbons. Here it was that on January 18, 1871, King William of Prussia, whose armies held Paris, was proclaimed German emperor.

The ministers formally tendered their resignations to him. Casimir-Perier requested them to remain in office. It is doubtful, however, whether Dupuy, the prime minister, will retain office. It is expected, in the event of his insisting upon his resignation being accepted, that the president will summon Burdeau to form a cabinet.

ITALIANS FLEE FROM FRANCE.

ROME, June 29.—Many Italian workingmen who were driven out of Marseilles, Lyons and Grenoble are returning to Italy. They tell of outrageous brutalities committed by unreasoning Frenchmen. They declare that many Italians in French towns have been wounded and that some have died of their injuries, but that the authorities are concealing the facts. Dispatches on the subject are being actively exchanged between Rome and Paris.

LYONS, France, June 29.—The trial of Cesario Santo, the anarchist assassin of President Carnot, is to take place July 23.

FATAL STORMS.

Many Places in Minnesota and South Dakota Suffer from Cyclones.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., June 30.—Southwestern Minnesota and eastern South Dakota have suffered severely from a series of windstorms of cyclonic tendencies. They traveled from southwest to northeast and there were three of unusual severity. The fatalities are as follows:

THE KILLED.

Mr. Guldan, Milaca, Minn.; Mrs. G. T. Hicks, Pipestone, Minn.; Miss Johnson, Larimore, N. D., killed by lightning; Miss Jennie Lindstrom, of St. Paul, killed at Darwin, Minn.; Charles Mietke, Sleepy Eye, Minn.; Henry Rhody, Larimore, N. D., killed by lightning; Mrs. Samuel Roach, Wessington, S. D.; Mrs. Sanders, Litchfield, Minn.; Miss. Nina Swift, near Aberdeen, S. D.; Walchesky, a baby, at Glencoe.

FATALLY INJURED

Mrs. Mohannah, Pipestone, Minn.; Schmidt, child of John, Sleepy Eye, Minn., Mrs. John Weiss, Cold Springs Minn.; John Winkle, Prairie, Minn.; Jacob Winkle, son of John, Prairie, Minn.

The westernmost storm arose in South Dakota and traversed the east end of the state, striking Alpena, Mellette, St. Lawrence and Aberdeen. The central storm was first heard of at Pipestone, in the southwest corner of this state. It passed over Tracy and Echo and Benville. Litchfield was struck by a later cyclone. The northernmost point in the central part of the storm's path was Collegeville, in Stearns county. The eastern end of the storm started in Windom, Minn. It struck Sleepy Eye with great fury. Minneapolis caught the tail end of the blow. It swept across the city, dipping low near Lake Harriet.

Knights of Labor asked Senator Kyle to introduce a bill in congress to permit the detachment of Pullman cars from trains.

MET AT DENVER.

Annual Convention of the Republican National League.

DENVER, Col., June 28.—The seventh annual convention of the National Republican league was called to order at 10 a. m. The Broadway theater was handsomely decorated for the occasion with the Stars and Stripes and a mass of foliage and growing flowers and was filled to overflowing with 1,500 delegates and representative republicans from every state in the union. The address of President Tracy was enthusiastically received.

The roll call followed immediately after the president's address and showed forty states and territories represented—the largest meeting in the history of the organization. Some of the delegations were very large. Before adjournment a motion was adopted that the president and secretary be authorized to prepare and transmit to Mme. Carnot and the republic of France the sense of the league on the assassination of President Carnot. The motion was carried without a dissenting vote.

The Platform of Principles Adopted at the Denver Convention.

The representatives of the National League of Republican Clubs of the United States, in convention assembled at the capital of the Centennial state, bow their heads in sorrow and humiliation at the spectacle of incapacity which the democratic party presents to our country and deplore the calamities which the giving of power to the present administration has brought upon our people. We congratulate the American people that this administration was compelled by public opinion to abandon its un-American Hawaiian policy.

In contrast with the shameful record of the democratic party, we exult over the record of glory which the republican party has made. Its achievements and its triumphs, extending over thirty years, establish it as the most masterful and enlightened political organization that has ever existed.

In the face of the present disaster to our country it is with increased solemnity that we once more renew our allegiance to the republican party and proclaim its cardinal principles.

We believe in a free ballot and a fair count, and we demand such legislation as will insure to every citizen the right to cast one free ballot in any election and to have that ballot honestly counted as cast. It is a noteworthy fact that the democratic party in congress, consistent in nothing else, was unanimous for the repal of the federal election laws, thus openly confessing itself the party of fraud.

We declare our belief in the doctrine of protection to American labor. American industries and American homes. We also believe in such reciprocal trade with the nations as will increase the market for the products of our farms, factories, forests and mines without increasing the competition which tends to lessen wages and degrade our labor.

We denounce the proposed vicious and destructive legislation known as the Wilson bill, and earnestly appeal to the republican United States senators to prevent its passage by all honorable means.

We believe in the use of gold and silver as money metals, maintained on a perfect parity and interconvertibility. We do not believe that there will be a permanent return of prosperity to our country until the full use and highest position of silver shall be restored, and we favor such legislation as will bring about this result.

The republican party is the constant friend of the soldiers and sailors of the union. The promises and pledges of the democratic party to the defenders of the republic before election were false and fraudulent and have been shamefully disregarded since election. We condemn unsparingly the treatment now accorded the helpless, maimed and crippled defenders of the flag and to the windows and orphans of our dead patriots as unfair and cruelly unjust.

We are most heartily in favor of the prompt admission into the union of the territories of Utah, New Mexico, Arizona and Oklahoma and we condemn the policy of the democratic administration in excluding and depriving them of their rights.

We demand that new safeguards be incorporated in our immigration and naturalization laws to prevent unworthy immigrants from landing on our shores and from obtaining citizenship.

We again commend to the favorable consideration of the republican clubs of the United States as a matter of education the question of granting suffrage to women.

We congratulate the women of Colorado and Wyoming on their possession of the elective franchise, and we cordially invite their cooperation in the work of rescuing the country from democratic and populist misrule.

The report of the committee on resolutions was adopted by a unanimous vote. W. W. Tracy was reelected president of the National Republican league in the afternoon by acclamation, Col. E. A. McAlpine, of New York, having sent a telegram instructing the New York delegation to withdraw his name. A. B. Humphrey, of New York, was reelected secretary.

HOPEFUL VIEWS.

A Better Feeling Is Reported in Trade Circles.

NEW YORK, June 30.—Bradstreet's weekly review of trade says:

"While there is no actual improvement in business throughout the country there are more favorable prospects and better feeling among merchants, with an increased number of instances where trade has been stimulated. The ending of the great bituminous coal strike is promptly followed by a sympathetic strike of railroad employes, which threatens disastrous effect on business by reason of interference with distribution and travel. Losses on perishable freight in transit are already reported. Other unfavorable features include a conference of Rhode Island cotton mill owners as to the advisability of shutting down, owing to accumulation of stocks, heavy arrivals of wool at eastern markets, where stocks are already large; delay in settling the coke strike, which prevents many industrial establishments from starting up; an extremely restricted volume of business among wholesale dealers in clothing at Baltimore, 43 per cent. of what it was in the first half of last year; delayed orders from country merchants in Georgia and South Carolina, where crop damage has been threatened; and a sharp restriction in the volume of general trade at Chicago, where the railway strike centers. At New Orleans trade in all lines is smaller. At Nashville and at Birmingham, Ala., it is dull and without sign of early improvement, which is true also at Portland.

"The total number of actual business failures in the United States in the last six months (failures in which assets are less than liabilities) is 6,528, which is more than in any preceding similar period, an increase of 4.6 per cent. compared with the first half of 1893, and 22 per cent. more than in six months in 1892. The present tendency in the number of failures to decrease is shown by the fact that while at the end of the first quarter of the current year the increase over the like period of last year was 900 failures, the increase this year over last, at the end of a half year, is only 289 failures. Total liabilities of failing traders for the six months are $82,555,000, assets being 54 per cent. of that total. These aggregates are each less than one-half of what they were for six months in 1892, and smaller than in six months of 1891 as well. Pennsylvania and California show striking increases in numbers of failures, and Illinois and Kansas noteworthy decreases.

Prendergast's Sanity.

CHICAGO, June 28.—Judge Payne rendered a decision Tuesday afternoon which will have an important bearing on the insanity inquiry. The confines of the inquiry have been disputed for some time. While Mr. Darrow was examining Dr. L. R. Head he asked how long in the doctor's opinion Prendergast had been insane. This raised the vital question. Objections being made by the state Judge Payne said:

"I have been waiting for this point to be raised. I shall instruct the jury that if the prisoner's condition is the same as it was on February 24 last, then it will have to be bound by the verdict rendered by the first jury. As I see it now, it must be proved that Prendergast became insane since judgment was pronounced upon him. No matter if he is proved insane at present, it must be shown that he has become so since February 24. Otherwise we should have to disregard the verdict of the court in the first case, which said that he was sane."

IN A STREET CAR.

But a feeble, bent old lady,
With a faded, wrinkled face,
Who along the car peered dimly
To obtain a vacant place;
Yet, as if with pulse electric,
Instantly upon his feet
Every man arose to give her
With a smile his empty seat.

Kindly glances rested on her;
Kindly hands were ready there
To support her should she need it.
For her soft and snowy hair
Seemed an aureole of glory
To those care-encumbered men,
As the mother love within them
Woke to consciousness again.

Ah, there's nothing half so holy
In this world of sin and woe
As the love that blessed our childhood
In the years of Long Ago;
And a common chord of feeling
Linked together man with man
When the thought of home and mother
Through that crowd of strangers ran.

ROMANCE OF LA ROSINE.

BY MAURICE GORDON.

[Copyright, 1894, by the Author.]

THE day was done, night fell upon the city, a breeze stole over the roofs; houses were for the time being deserted; those who possessed gardens carried their chairs thither; the less fortunate occupied doorsteps, and complained languidly of the heat.

Out on Rosine square, where every house opened on the street, and where one might chat with the neighborhood from one's own doorway, discussion ran high. M. Jacques, the shoemaker, had observed that rain was at hand, whereupon Vasson, the jeweler, had seen fit to sneer. "Rain," he repeated scornfully; "ma foi! a storm, more likely. I remember in 1844—"

"Histe!" said monsieur, "mademoiselle and her fiancee are merry tonight."

"There is a proverb which I no longer believe," murmured Vasson, "the course of true love sometimes does run smooth."

"Ah! When people are rich," put in a woman's voice.

"He is handsome," said M. Jacques, "in the American way. It is a pity he is not creole."

"Mademoiselle is an angel. Now if monsieur were a prince."

"A prince! and why should a paltry prince? Come, monsieur, it is too hot to quarrel; let Marie be. What say you, Marie, to a walk in the square?"

She rose and followed Pierre, her lifelong friend, her half-avowed lover, down the quiet street. Beneath the de la Maure balcony they paused; behind the vines they distinguished the figures of the lovers. The two heads, one so fair, the other dark and smooth, were close together.

"It is a good thing to be rich," he said, pointing over his shoulder.

"O Pierre," cried she, "it is not money that makes us happy."

"What then?"

"You know. I need not tell you."

"But that is it," he cried. "I will hear it from you and no one else; come, we will finish our talk here."

He led her into the square to a seat beneath the myrtles; while they chatted the wind sent the blooms quivering to the grass; one of them drifted to Marie's shoulder. She caught it and studied it lovingly.

"Myrtle!" cried Pierre, guessing her thoughts, "that means a wedding."

"Charles," Jeanne de la Maure was saying at this moment, "do not go tomorrow. Last island seems so far away, and Pere Francois says that, in rough weather, the journey is full of danger."

SHE CAUGHT IT AND STUDIED IT LOVINGLY.

"In rough weather, perhaps."

"But you must not laugh; everyone thinks that a storm is brewing; don't you feel it in the air?"

"My love, did I follow my wish, nothing could drag me away; but poor Reid's letter was so despondent, I think I ought to go to him; he was very good to me once. I can't bear to think of his dying out there alone."

"Dying?" repeated Jeanne.

"Yes, and his life is ebbing away to the music of flutes and the laughter of the thoughtless."

"Dying," she said again, "so young!" Her eyes filled with tears. "Poor, poor fellow. Go to him, Charles, I shall not keep you; tell him how sorry I was; but, my darling, I shall miss you so; do not stay long."

He drew her to him, and promised that nothing should keep him from her; the neighbors saw her, in her white gown and scarlet ribbons, lean over the railing to wish him a last good-by.

"You will not be long, mon cher?"

"A fortnight, and I will return."

But, a few days later, the country thrilled with the tidings from Last island; a storm, unparalleled in violence, had broken upon the resort; the hotel and cottages were scattered like houses of cards; the pleasure craft along the beach destroyed; the island itself submerged.

The adjacent islands were strewn with corpses; many perished never to be heard of again, among others Charles Deane, Jeanne de la Maure's lover. The survivors, a broken-hearted band, were eloquent in praise of him; he had saved many lives before losing his own, and was last seen swimming toward the life-saving boat with a child in his arms. Being a daring swimmer, but little fear was entertained as to his safety; he was, at first, thought to have found refuge on one of the gulf islands, or to have been picked up by an outgoing vessel, but as time went on, bringing no tidings, days drifting into weeks, weeks into months, his death was reluctantly accepted by his friends.

Even Jeanne de la Maure, whose faithful heart refused to despair, realized that further hope was a mockery.

One balmy evening about a year later Pere Francois, walking down Royal street, heard his name called softly. A carriage had drawn up to the curb and a girl in deep black was beckoning to him.

"Jeanne de la Maure!" he exclaimed.

"Yes, it is I," she answered. "We have just returned from abroad. Won't you get in? I have something to say to you."

He obeyed wonderingly.

"Now, my father," speaking in quick, eager tones, "who are so wise and good, tell me, will I be doing wrong to enter a convent?"

"You?" he said, protestingly.

"Oh, why not? I am so weary of the life we lead."

"My child," said the priest, "we must consider. To act upon impulse would be wrong; there must be preparation and probation. Should you hesitate before taking the last vows there will be yet time for you to withdraw."

"I shall never wish to do that."

They were nearing home; a sudden turn had brought them in sight of the square; the syringas were in bloom; the long grass white with clover; the air was full of cheerful sounds.

Pere Francois, most grateful of men, turned impulsively to his companion.

"It is a beautiful world!" said he. She averted her face, but the tears so resolutely fought back could be restrained no longer; his idle speech was the last straw upon an already overburdened heart. The carriage stopped before her door, and the little priest, overwhelmed with remorse, lifted her out and led her weeping up the steps.

"Poor mademoiselle, if one could do anything?" The voice was the woman's who had once spoken bitterly of "the rich." Marie and her husband gazed wistfully from their shop door.

"PERE FRANCOIS, DON T YOU KNOW ME?"

"Think of it," said the young wife, "we used to envy her."

"It was I who envied her," cried Pierre, "you, who said that love, not money, brought happiness; and it is so."

"Yes," she said absently; her eyes were not on him, but on the balcony opposite, where a black-robed figure paced slowly to and fro.

The church was crowded to suffocation; the ceremonies attendant upon the solemn function known as "taking the veil" were wont to be impressive; a fashionable audience always witnessed them; to-day offered no exception to the rule. Aside from the religious features, rumor had whispered that a young girl of wealth and beauty—none other indeed than Jeanne de la Maure, the belle of many a ballroom—was to renounce the "pomps and vanities of this wicked world" forever.

The organ was playing softly; the priests and novices had entered the building; a hush lay over the assemblage, when an interruption so unlooked for occurred that the congregation might be pardoned for rising in an outburst of amaze.

Down the middle aisle, to the foot of the chancel, rushed an agitated man. He was tall and magnificently built, his rough curls were fair, his eyes deeply blue. As people gazed, they recognized and thrilled with wonder.

"Pere Francois, don't you know me?" he cried, passionately. "I am Charles Deane, Jeanne de la Maure's promised husband; surely, my father, you remember me? They told me she was here, that I would be too late"—his voice broke. "Say I am yet in time?"

The bishop advanced and laid his hand on the young man's arm.

"She is not here," he said, "but it is not as you think. Acting upon our advice, she has resolved to devote the rest of her life to secular charities, in which you can help her."

"Where is she?" pleaded Deane.

The bishop whispered a few words. Deane knelt a moment in prayer, then, rising, made his way out of the church.

"It reads like a fairy-tale," cried Vasson; "carried out to sea; picked up by Malays; treated as a slave; finally helped to escape by a native he had befriended—one does not hear such a story every day." Marie and Pierre assented.

"Monsieur is a hero," said the young wife, "you remember my saying—a prince."

"A prince!" broke in Vasson, "and did not I—"

"Hush!" said the little shoemaker—from the balcony opposite came the murmur of voices—"monsieur and mademoiselle are happy to-night."

An Accurate Description.

While I was stopping at a friend's house the other day her husband came home, and before he had taken off his coat or hat he exclaimed:

"Well, I wish you could have seen the woman I saw to-day!"

"Why, was she pretty?" we both asked.

"Pretty? Well, I should say so, and she had on the neatest little suit you ever saw. By jove! I wish you could get something that looked like that once in awhile," he said, turning to his wife.

"Well, tell us what it was like, and maybe I can," she returned.

"Oh, I can't tell you just what it was like, but it had those things over the shoulders like your purple dress."

"Do you mean ruffles?" interrupted his wife.

"Yes, I guess they are ruffles. It had a skirt of peculiar color, and the basque was a sort of green. She wore a coat or something like most women wear, and a hat with a ribbon over it. She looked stunning, I tell you!"

And his wife murmured: "I should think so."—Washington Post.

ARTESIAN WELLS.

The Chances of Striking Water in Any Given Place.

A subject on which there is still a large amount of misconception is that of artesian or flowing wells. Usually, as we perforate the crust of the earth, we find water at no great depth, but generally the water will rise only to a certain height in the well, which is known as the water line. This line may vary in wet or dry weather, or on high or low ground, and in the same locality water is sometimes found only at surprising depths, while near by it may be found much nearer the surface. But there are localities in almost every country where a perforation down the rocks is followed by an overflowing fountain of water, sometimes, as in some portions of the west, with force enough to operate machinery.

This outflow can only be accomplished by some kind of pressure. There is generally a higher "head;" that is, the source of supply has some higher altitude, and, while this may be miles away, the water has found material or favoring crevices under a more compact stratum to serve as conduits, and, when this compact cover is penetrated, the water will rise to a height corresponding with its source, and with a force, light or heavy, corresponding with its pressure. Such is the usual condition that sustains a well of this kind, but there are also others. A natural gas pressure may at some point be exerted against a column of water, which, when exit is furnished, will then gush forth. Then, again, there are evidences of a sufficient surface pressure to force the water to and over the surroundings when vent is offered.

The phenomenon of gushing forth is sometimes encountered in unexpected places. In the small town of North Rima, ten miles south of Youngstown, O., an ordinary well was dug some years ago, and, at a depth of less than thirty feet, a stream was encountered that filled the hole nearly as fast as the one digger could be drawn up, the ever-flow issuing forth in a fair-sized brook. Alarm was taken, the excavation was hurriedly filled with stones and dirt, and the flow was shut off. In the county of Williams, in the northwest corner of Ohio, flowing wells can be secured in many localities by simply driving a pipe, often to a depth of only twenty feet.

Hardin county, in the same state, also has districts where the water will overflow, and both the counties mentioned are rather flat. A most remarkable geyser was struck at Belle Plaine, in the southwest corner of Benton county, Iowa, some years ago, and such was the volume of water that shot forth and impeled with such terrible force that engineers from Chicago were employed to devise a method to get it under control. All flowing oil wells are such by reason of gas pressure, and, as the pressure diminishes, the flow abates.

While no one may know in advance just where an artesian flow may be met with, it is not so hard to determine where such a flow would be impossible. Probably twenty years ago the commissioners of Allen county, Ind., concluded to have an artesian well in the courthouse yard at Fort Wayne. Pole tools were secured for drilling, and by the most tedious method a hole was made over three thousand feet deep. Water of a most villainous smell was struck at a depth of forty feet, and was there all through the progress of the work, and is still there. The remarkable feature of the case is that the city mentioned is right on the divide between the great lakes and the Mississippi basin, and hence called Summit City.

Yet here, with nothing higher for thousands of miles in any direction, a perforation was made three thousand feet deep in the hope of securing an outflow against every law known to hydraulics. For years the water was scorned, having a flavor as of decayed eggs, but at length, when an analysis was made, it was declared on high authority to possess extraordinary medical virtues, and such was the pressure for the once despised fluid that a fountain, operated by steam power, was established to accommodate the public. No artesian wells can be possible in such localities.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

WASHINGTON IN WESTMINSTER.

Loyal Britons Do Not Like His Bas-Relief on Andre's Tomb.

Probably few Americans know that in Westminster abbey, among the memorials of those whom Great Britain delights to honor, is a bas-relief of him whom more than any other America reveres. Not that it was put there in honor of an American, oh, dear no! But forty odd years after his execution Maj. Andre's remains were moved from their place of interment near the Hudson river to Westminster abbey, and a marble tablet ornamented with a group of figures was raised above them. In this group two personages are conspicuous. One is Andre apparently waving a farewell to his British comrades in the distance; the other is George Washington, seemingly refusing an entreaty for the prisoner's release.

Of the few who know that the "father of his country" thus stands in effigy in Westminster probably fewer are aware that he occasionally gets his head knocked off by some fervent Briton who resents the intrusion of so distinguished a rebel among England's loyal dead. A glance shows that Washington's head has been freshly replaced, and the information is given that the last of these emphatic vindications of Saratoga, "the field of the grounded arms," occurred over a dozen years ago.

It is striking to find on both sides of the Atlantic, in spite of the protestations of friendship of these latter days, that the memories that hang about this incident of Andre's death are still intensely bitter. Fourteen years ago Cyrus Field, an American of wide reputation, erected a monument to Andre on the spot where he died, bearing an inscription composed by the late Dean Stanley. One night, a few months after, this shaft was overthrown with dynamite. There was nothing in the words it bore intended to ruffle American sensibility; nor, probably, would this slight memorial of a brave man's last moments have been molested had it been raised by English hands. The offense lay in that an American in the year 1880 should commemorate with graven eulogy the enemy who in 1780 came within a hair's breadth of overturning the embryo American commonwealth. Public antipathy to the prostrate plinth was not lessened when Mr. Field caused it to be restored to the perpendicular, and but a few weeks elapsed before a violent explosion again startled the neighboring village from its slumber, and daylight revealed the objectionable stone blown to such fragments as to preclude its further restoration. It is a coincidence that the destruction of Andre's monument in America and the latest breaking off of Washington's head in Westminster abbey should have happened during the same year.—Chicago Times.

BARBERS TURN HIGHWAYMEN.

Driven to it by the Greediness of Their Employers, Who Want it All.

It lacked but a few minutes of nine o'clock, the closing hour of the barber shop in question. The proprietor had already gone home, leaving only his head man and three barbers. The three chairs were occupied and another customer was waiting when I entered.

The waiting customer was a young man, whose frowsy head told plainly what work he wanted done. His appearance wasn't exacty the kind to fill a barber with aspirations, especially just before closing time. The three had evidently sized him up and were endeavoring to miss him if possible.

The most nervous man of the lot, however, finally gave in and shouted "Next!" The young man shuffled over to the chair and called for a hair cut. The barber threw the apron around him and tucked a towel about the young man's neck with a rapidity that made him gasp. Then he seized his scissors, and the next moment the air was filled with flying hair. He went over the young man's head like a lawn mower over grass.

The other two barbers chuckled to themselves and exchanged occasional winks. One of these turned his customer out of the chair and began to prepare to leave the shop. The third one soon finished his job and motioned to me in a sickly fashion.

"Shave?" he inquired in a gentle voice.

"Hair cut, shampoo and shave." I replied.

The result of this answer was dreadful. The barber turned to his companions and broke out in a volley of Italian. When he had finished he turned to me and said it was too late to get all that work done. I told him to go on, that I was all right, and he unblushingly replied:—

"Ah, yes. But how much? I can't agee to do it for an ordinary trifle. Ten cents is the regulation tip for a shave, and I couldn't think of doing the job for that. How much will you give me?"

"A quarter," I replied rather peevishly.

"Good, good!" he exclaimed as he began work beamingly.

And then the barber burglar rattled on confidentially. He told me of the mysteries of his business and how the highwaymen features of it are carried on in New York.

"We are driven to it by the boss barbers themselves," he chattered. They want it all. Our salaries are as bad as those of waiters. We get barely enough to pay rent, and for good jobs we have to pay a commission besides. Take the swell hotels for instance. To get a chair in a shop of that kind one has to have influence—and influence costs money in the barber business as well as politics. That's why my mate at the next chair is working so indifferently just now. He knows there ain't anything in it."—N. Y. Herald.

HE WAS VERY, VERY NICE.

But Just the Kind of a Fellow No Girl Wanted.

Strawber—Do you suppose Clara Penrose cares anything about me?

Singerly—Well, she said some pretty nice things about you last night when I was there.

"Did she? What were they?"

(Seriously)—"For one thing, she said, you were a fine dancer. It was such a comfort, she said, to find a man who really danced well."

"I'm sure I'm glad she likes my dancing. I've spent enough time at it."

"Then she said your manners were perfect. It was a pleasure to go anywhere with you, she said, because she felt so perfectly secure with you, and sure of you."

(Delighted) — "Gracious! I had no idea she thought so much of me as that. Did she say anything else?"

"Oh, yes! She spoke about your conversation. In the light society talk of the day she thinks you have no equal, and then, you are so full of tact, and your clothes are always so stylish, so neat, without being too extreme. Oh, she gave you a great send-off, old man."

(Beside himself)—"I should say she did. I must cultivate that girl. Beautiful, rich, accomplished. What more could a man want in a wife? I have always (complacently) fancied her, but now I think the feeling is even deeper than that."

(Warningly)—"Don't let it get too deep, old man. I didn't tell you all."

"Didn't you? What more was there?"

"She wound up by saying that, in fact, you were just the sort of a fellow that no girl would ever think of marrying."—Truth.

LEMONS IN SUMMER.

Preparations That Are Wholesome, Refreshing and Appetizing.

In hot weather a lemon sherbet or water ice is refreshing and wholesome. The juice of an orange is a great addition to this ice, and the proportions may be varied. Four large, juicy lemons make quite a quantity when an orange is used. Peel the yellow rind of the lemons very thin, and from the orange also, and put to boil in a porcelain saucepan with one and a quarter pounds of sugar and one quart of water. Boil five minutes, set away to cool; when cold strain into the lemon and orange juice; strain the whole into the freezer and freeze until stiff, then take out the beater, and the whites of three eggs beaten to a stiff froth, beat well together, cover closely or put into a mold, repack and set away to harden.

Did you ever hear of the Roman cure for malaria? I would advise a judicious preparation for anathema maranatha, when about to administer the dose; it will give the marble Venus a wry face but is claimed to have cured stubborn cases. Allow one pint of water to one lemon—four lemons make sufficeint for many a dose; cut up the lemons, rind, pulp and all, in the water and boil until the whole is reduced to one pint; a teaspoonful before each meal is the dose.

On hot mornings, when the appetite fails and the sight of food disgusts one, try sliced lemons for breakfast. Peel carefully, remove every particle of pith, slice down instead of across into a deep glass saucer and strew liberally with sugar.—Philadelphia Record.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

The Clapp Murder.

The coroner's investigation of the murder of John H. Clapp, at St. Paul, developed the fact that the witnesses sworn to prove the facts in the case are more than ordinarily conflicting with each other. The fact of the dead man carrying a cigar stump between the fingers of his right hand up to the time of his death is something that the defense seems puzzled over, and the attorneys for the state make no efforts to bring out further facts to complicate the statement in any way which might be used to advantage in the trial of the case. The hesitancy of some of the witnesses in swearing to what they had seen, or on the other hand the attempt of being too profuse in explanation, either by words or action, were apparent.

The following verdict was returned: "We, the jury, find that John H. Clapp came to his death through a death wound in the throat inflicted by one Ehle Allen."

DELANO DIARY

--A good joke is reported on one of the young married ladies, of Delano, who went to Buffalo to spend the 4th and passed for a widow.

—A company of about 100 people gathered in Lewis' grove south of town on the Fourth and picnicked after a good old fashion. Everybody coming to the table and helping themselves.

—The Eagle claims to have heard a report last week about Dr. Catlin and Joseph VanEman. That's nothing strange. Long eared animals are liable to hear reports, sometimes.

—Considerable rye, in this neighborhood, was in shock on Saturday evening, June 30. Old settlers say this is the first time they ever knew of harvest begining here in June.

—No regular 4th of July Celebration was observed here. But young America kept a calliope at Buck's mill running about all Tuesday night, and the usual amount of powder was exploded.

—Mat Schoust Jr. is building a fine residence on his farm opposite Fred Adicks Sr. John Cunningham has built a new addition to his barn. Mrs. Geiger is erecting an addition to her farm home Who says Franklin Farmers are not prospering?

—Quite a lot of cattle, sheep and other products of the farm find a good market on this road, since other roads are tied up by the strike. Provisions are said to begrowing scarce in the cities: the longer the strike lasts the scarcer they are likely to get.

—Word has been received here that Prof Zelany has accepted a position in the East side High School, Minneapolis, and will not be our principal for the next year as was expected he would be. Our board will have added to their already arduous duties that of securing a new principal.

—A city chap brought his girl up to spend the Fourth, and hired a runaway rig to take her riding. He must have forgotten how to drive horses as he took two turnovers during the day. He insists howeyer that it was worth all the trouble and fright to see his best girl get out the back of the buggy when danger was apparent. parent.

—It appears strange to us to see fields of dead ripe grain standing in the fields for days after it should be in shock. But for some reason people in the woods do not cut their grain as early as they do on the prairie. We think it from the habit of waiting for it to dry out when it was full of big weeds about stumps. But this time has passed and there is no apparent reason for delaying harvest any longer than their neighbors on the prairie, and runing the risk, for several days, or a week of haying it beaten into the ground by rain or hail. In our younger days we were in the employ of a business man that owned a large grist mill and several big farms. His wheat was among the first to be cut and shocked and thrashed, and ground into flour. We one season prevaliled upon a farmer living near Delano to cut his wheat about a week earlier than he intended to, as he had a large harvest and little help he did this and although laughed at by his neighbors, took great pride in showing us some of the bundles when stacking, saying: "that is the best wheat i have got. I wish it had all been cut that day."

—Subscribe and advertise in the Buffalo Gazette.

—Rev. E. C. Henke, of Minneapolis is expected to preach in the Prebyterian church here on Sunday at 10:30 A. M. In the evening at Maple Plain.

—It is currently reported that a young couple, of Independence, have eloped, and the parents of the would be bride were looking for her on the Fourth. The young lady might have waited a few days until she would be 18 years old, if the old folks wouldn't consent.

Personals.

John Peterson, of the Soo road, was home for the 4th of July.

Miss Carrie Brenner, of Minneapolis, visited Delano friends over the 4th.

Hon. C. G. Halgren and family visited Delano yesterday after the shower.

J. H. Hoover, of Howard Lake and J. C. Oakley, of Buffalo, visited Delano today.

Ezra Ferrell, of Montrose, was in town yesterday, he patronized the Delano Roller Mills.

A. D. Smith of New Castle, Neb. arrived here Sunday evening for a few weeks vacation with relatives and friends.

Harry Haynes, of St. Paul, and John L. Mayer, of Minneapolis, were here on the 4th seeing the boys and girls.

W. M. Kespohl spent the 4th at home. He is traveling for an artificial limb company and has lately been in Mo., Kansas, and Iowa, but thinks their is no place like home.

Joseph Bland and son Thornton, of Marysville, were Delano visitors yesterday. Uncle Joe says corn is good but wheat and oats will not average over half a crop. Still people will have enough to live on.

Diphtheria.

Too much can not be said and written concerning so dangerous a disease when it is claiming victims in our vicinity as it has been lately. It is what is known as an infectious and contagious disease, it is mostly confined to children but occasionally grown people have it, and some of them die with it. Usually those coming down with it have recently been exposed by coming in contact with those having it, or who have just recovered from it and about whom some germs of the disease still cling. A child may come down in a few hours after exposure or it may show no symptoms for several days, and then have a typical case. Headache, fever, sometimes vomiting, and sore throat are among first symptoms, when a child presents these or any of them, when the disease is in the neighborhood or there is any fear of diphtheria, it should at once be put in a room by itself, no one but its nurse coming near it until the doctor has determined whether or not it is the dreaded disease. All other children should be kept out of the house. In fine weather as this it would not hurt them to camp out if things were properly arranged. If other children are kept entirely away and precautions used against carrying the disease from the sick one, large families often escape with but one or two cases. Sometimes one or two children may have it in a light form, not going to bed all day, and communicate it to the balance of the family some of whom may die. For most cases it is best to keep them in bed until the last sign of a membrane in the throat has disappeared. Plenty of fresh air and sunlight is good but no direct drafts should be allowed. Plenty of nourishment, as milk, should be given from the first day. Patients who are sleepy should be roused up to receive their medicine punctually, night and day. When the disease has run its course great care should be taken to disinfect the clothing, burn up straw from straw beds, and rags and anything that may hold the germs, fumigate the rooms, and make them pure as possible before the balance of the family are permitted to come in to them. If all precautions are strictly observed from the first the disease will not get so great a spread nor prove so fatal as it has done. The time to quarentine is the first case that appears: if this is effectually done others may not occur.

County Cullings.

If Wright county fails to get Pidgeon and Latham on the ticket, look out for A. Y. for Congressman if he has to go on the Populist ticket. Wright county must have her share, is the Senator's plan.

From the Buffalo Journal and other saurces, we learn that at the Republican county convention, held at Buffalo, on Saturday C. A. Pidgeon was endorsed for Clerk of Supreme Court, Frank E. Latham, for District Judge. 24 delegates were chosen to attend the Congressional Convention; 16 to the State convention; and 9 to the Judicial convention. Bob Dunn don't seem to have much show unless he can trade in a lot of Pidgeon votes. If Bob Dunn gets a nomination look out for squawls in this neck-o-woods.

Senator Eaton's paper says of the recent convention at Buffalo: "Little interest was taken in the selection of delegates to the congressional convention for it is generally recognized that Duluth will be allowed to name the man and the convention will simply ratify Duluth's choice. The republican party in this district seems to be afraid to do any thing else for fear if they don't get their man the Duluth republicans will do again as they did two years ago, go back on the republican candidate."

We see by the St. Cloud Times that Mr. Eastman, a St. Cloud editor thinks of taking a chance in the row since Duluth's kill-Kinney fight ended by the whole Towne. Let your bee buzz, Senator: the whole thing may be yet, when its Dunn, Eaton of Wright, AY?

WAVERLY WINKS.

Mrs. J. H. O'Connell left for St. Paul Wednsday morning to attend to her sister, Mrs. Hogan who is quite sick.

Mr. Lemasters and Miss Eunice Denifield, of Howard, spent Sunday with the family of Nick Hill.

Mr. Jim Franey looked very much broken up last Sunday, but when you take into consideration, the long rough ride from Buffalo, and the impurities of the night air with abundance of mosquitoes, he looked fairly well. Of course Jim has a mission to perform and small things will not hinder him in the least from doing his duty.

In less than a week, the Woodland House accomidated 20 commercial travellers.

The Waverly and Howard teams crossed bats Sunday. The talley stood 18 to 8 in favor of the home team. Mike Hagerty umpired the game and gave general satisfaction.

The home of Mr. Hayes, north of Montrose, was badly dilapidated by last Wednesday's storm.

Messrs Ed. Seems and Chas. Lowe attended the Winsted fair Monday.

Young Harris, son of the murdered Harris, of Minneapolis, passed through town Friday on his way to his home in Breckenridge.

The Marysville Literary Club held their regular meeting Saturday evening at their usual meeting place and a large audience greeted the participants. Our article in last week's GAZETTE in reference to the club was read by J. M. Casey and an unanimous vote of thanks given to us. Several members took occasion to speak of us in most flattering terms and extolled the GAZETTE in the highest manner. The club is doing good work and we trust all the members will be benefited by the organization. The following program was carried out:

Instrumental music, .....Joe Kelley.
Song,.....James McGuire.
Recitation,.....J. M. Casey.
Music,.....Chas. Williams.
Debate: "Resolved that the Lawyer is of more benefit to the community than the doctor:"

Those who argued in the affirmative were, James McGuire and George Doerfler Jr. Negative John Reardon Jr., and J. M. Casey. The Judges were Mr. Lemasters, Michael O'Connell and Mr. Williams and decided in favor of the affirmative.

After the debate Mr. Silas Forrest made some very appropriate remarks and the meeting adjourned to meet again Saturday evening July 7.

Miss Emma Vondulac, of St. Paul, is visiting with her parents in this village.

Messrs John and Hans Brandser drove to Howard Monday. The Branders sare first class tailors and have orders to fill from all over the county.

Mr. R. M. Bohn, of Delano, took a leading part in the programe for the O'Connor benifit concert. Mr. Bohn is a first class musician and is very popular with Waverly citizens in general. He is always a welcome visitor to our city and the people here appreciate his many acts of kindness shown to the village.

Miss Dolly Potter left Monday evening for Litchfield to visit friends.

Mr. J. M. Casey made a buisness trin to Minneapolis, Tuesday.

Mr. J. K. Cullen and Cecilia McDonald, who have been visiting friends in Tintah, returned home Friday.

Mrs. H. Tanner and daughters left last week for St. Paul to visit friends.

Mrs. O. Secore, of Hurley, Wis., who was called here owing to the sickness of her father, returned home Monday.

Mr. Murphy, of Minneapolis, spent the Fourth with Mr. James Grattan at his Woodland home.

Mr. James McGuire, of this village, was the orator of the day at the Midleville celebration. Jim made the eagle scream with eloquent utterances and the young American present carried away big chunks of patriotism.

It is almost impossible to give the names of all of those who went to Maple Lake the Fourth to celebrate, so we will not attempt to make a record of their names.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Quinn, of St. Paul, spent the Fourth with relatives here.

Mr. A. B. Morse spent the Fourth with his brother at Minneapolis.

Mr. James McGuire visited in Montrose Tuesday.

Mr. Earl Parker is selling an automatic steam cooking machine and is meeting with good success. Mr. L. V. Kyte uses one in the Woodland House and it gives satisfaction in every detail.

The Lake Mary folks enjoyed their Fourth celebration in an unusual and splendid manner by all the families of the neighborhood Jonnie in a picnic.

A Small Delay.

We read the following story of Rev. John Todd:

When a little boy his father was very sick. One day he asked him to go to the drug store and get him some medicine. John wanted to play just then, and instead of going to the store he spent awhile with the boys just out of sight of the house. Then he came back intending to say that the druggist did not keep that kind of medicine.

But when he came into the house his father was dying. When he came to his bedside the father said, "My little boy, I am suffering great pain for want of that medicine"

Johnny started in great distress to get it now, but it was too late. When he came back his father was almost gone. He could only say, "Love God and always speak the truth for the eye of God is always upon you. Now kiss me once more and say goodby." Mr. Todd said that when he was an old man that every day his hart ached when he thought of how he acted that day.--The Ram's Horn.

We See What We Look For.

This old proverb is true the world over. It is related that a military man once said, "I haye been in India for many years and I never saw a native Christian the whole time." He however remarked that during his residence in India he had killed thirty tigers. A missionary who was present said, "Did I understand you to say thirty, colonel?" "Yes, sir, thirty," replied the officer. "Well, now, this is strange," said the missionary. "I have been in India thirty-five years and have never seen a wild liye tiger all the while." "Very likely not, sir," said the colonel, "but that is because you did not look for them." "Perhaps so," said the missionary, "but was not that the reason you never saw a native Christian?" —The Ram's Horn.

Binding Twine.

Henry Wolfer, warden of the penitentiary, at Stillwater has sent out a lot of samples of the prison made binding twine. The twine is of hemp, grown in Minnesota, Iowa and Kentucky, mostly. Mr. Wolfer says:

"This twine will be sold the present season at a price not to exceed 7 cents per pound, and lower, if necessary, to meet competition of any twine of any length and quality that may be placed on the market, said price to be finally determined by the Board of Managers June 1, 1894. All the purchasers of twine previous to that date will be entitled to the benefit of any reductions below seven cents that may be made by the Board. There need, therefor, be no hesitancy in placing orders now, as the prices will be adjusted as above indicated." Farmers who will need twine this fall, if they like the twine, will do well to place their orders in time. Call and get a sample at the GAZETTE office. We have a full ball for examination. 26tf

MR. TOMPKINS ON HIS BOARDERS.

Come, Mandy, get the fly screens. I know they ain't no good—
A healthy fly will sure get in if oncet he's said he would.
But we can't take no chances; an' the city boarder's queer—
He allus wants his fly screens up when he's a-stayin' here.

I think we'd also better get a spinnin' wheel or two,
An' set 'em in the drawin'-room, because, 'tween me an' you,
We may get some one here who for antique things has a whim,
An' who will pay us twice its cost to take it home with him.

An, by the way, ye'd better buy, say, twenty dozen eggs.
They does 'em up in lime these days, an' sells 'em out in kegs.
Then every mornin' I'll go out an' sort of strew 'em round
The coops an' hay lofts, where they're sure by boarders to be found.

For I have noticed that the folks who come up here to stay
Thinks eggs is fresher laid if they have found 'em—an'. I say.
Pack up the tablecloths, because these town folks think that we Eat off a plain pine table without any cloth. Law me!

It makes me laugh to think of 'em, They call us "new an' "green,"
But they're the very verdantest that ever I have seen,
An' every year when they come here—I know it is a sin—
But, Lord! how we poor country folks do take those fellers in!

—Harper's Bazar.

MARTIAL law has been proclaimed at Sacramento, Cal., and the military forces are in command.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND is going to make the Pullman company arbitrate under a law passed in 1888.

THE St. Cloud Times and other papers of our Congressional district rict claim that the nomination of Towne instead of Kinney, of Duluth for Congress, by that county was another A. P. A. victory.

THE sensational headlines in the dailies, perhaps served to increase the sale of papers for a few days but it didn't seem to wear well. People want facts and when the articles failed to bear out the statements in the headlines they soon tired of reading the papers.

IF the mention of the dailies in using sensational heads to the strike articles was to aid the strikers, they, in part at least, accomplished their object. People would begin to read the headings, would go on to the bottom of the article, and then exclaim what is the use in lying on them fellows like that?

THE Senate finally passed what was left of the Wilson bill, the other day, and turned it over to the tender mercies of the House where it is receiving some more going over. People have lost interest in the whole concern and don't expect much of the present Congress. Had they however, passed the Wilson bill in its original form the republicans and populists would now be howling that is what ails the country.

BEDE'S BUDGET says the republicans in St Louis county had the power and used it; they hold a majority of the votes in in judicial district and sent and instructed for Judge Lewis delegation to the convention practically excluding republicans of the counties of Cook, Lake, and Carlton from a voice in the nomination. Thats republicanism true and undefiled. It is the same game they play on each other in this end of the district, right along.

WHEN a man once looses the respect of his fellow men it is hard to regain it. When a man begins to go down hill everybody gives him a kick. But he may be a terrible mean man a long time before anybody starts him on the decline. In the case of the Pullman car company everything, so far as the general public seemed to know, moved along smoothly, and it was considered one of the institutions of the country, and its members must be consulted on all the leading measures of the land. But when their men could endure no longer the treatment received and the A. R. U. joined in to help them it comes out right away that it has always been a mean, grasping company. Why din't someone think to say so before? Why didn't some liberty lover call the company down in ringing terms long ago? But now that the ball has been set rolling lots of people are climbing into the band wagon. The great Republican Statesman, John Sherman, says he has long been thinking of introducing some kind of a bill into Congress obliging the grasping company to take half rates they now receive and furnish much better accommodations. He thinks they would get rich fast enough then. Then comes the Methodist Herald and says that the Presbyterian and the Methodist preachers at Pullman both thought things were not just right for a long time. What are the preachers there for, if not to point out man's sins? Why did not they, a long time since call public attention to these giant wrongs? Even the St. Paul Globe now says everybody has known what kind of people they were for a long time. If so why hadn't that patriotic sheet announced to the public in that big headline type of hers the fact for months passed and tried to avert the impending strike. Everybody seemed to wait for everybody else and then come in with the usual, I told you so. If Congressmen Sherman or the preachers or the St. Paul Globe or any other news papers knows of any more cases of the kind they should not be so slow about making them public.

Boycotting vs Boycotting.

If it was not such a serious question at present it would be rather amusing to see how awfully touched up most of the city papers are because the A. R. U. have posted notices for merchants not to sell goods to a couple of fellows in West St. Paul who had good jobs on the rail road and refused to go out with the others on a strike, as a penalty saying "Failing to do so we shall be compelled to withold our patronage from you."

How differently those city chaps look at it when it is at home! How they do all hang together and write the poor laboring man down. Why don't they spend some of their time and talent telling the people how a short time ago millers from the country could not sell flour in the city markets? Why don't they try to bulldose people in the city to beleve they were liable to arrest and punnishment and other misterious things if they didn't permit country mills to sell their flour in the cities? who ever heard a word against the "boycott" then instituted against flour dealers that handled country brands?

It looks to us as if the good old Democratic way of "Equal rights to all and special privileges to none," is the best solution of this question. People have a right to work for whom and for what wages they see fit without the interference of others and if city or other newspapers are going to criticise laboring men for boycotting merchants they ought, in justice to criticise tradesman and others for boycoting country millers and others. Toat fair gentlemen, toat fair.

The Strike.

The strike inaugurated a couple of weeks ago is one of the greatest ever known. So far as we have been able to learn the employes of the Pullman car company at Pullman, Illinois, became dissatisfied with their treatment by the company; being obliged to rent houses of, and deal with the stores of the company and other things not pleasant to them, besides having their wages cut down. It seems an arbitration of the difficulties was called for and the company refused, saying they had nothing to arbitrate. Then the A. R. U. took up their cause and agreed among themselves to handle no trains with Pullman cars attached. Then the General Managers of railroads held a meeting and agreed to fight the boycott to the end. And to teach the employes that they could run the trains to suit themselves. The Knights of Labor then joined with the American Railway Union in boycotting the handling of freight hauled over roads using Pullman cars. Mr. Pullman himself, hied himself away to the seaboard for his health and to be away from the tumult. As men refused to haul cars on roads belonging to the General Managers association or handling Pullman cars, freight, mails, and passengers were delayed. Mobs congregated on the Pacific coast, in Chicago and other places and some of them did damage to property as in Kensington near Chicago a lot of cars were burned on the tracks; fights between deputy marshals and militia companies on one side and the mobs on the other ensued several people were reported killed, mostly by accident. The daily papers came out in sensational headlines, as "A score of men shot down by U. S. troops" and wound up by saying that an awkward policemen had fired his pistol and killed a girl who was looking on at a row in the street. Grover Cleveland sent Gen. Miles to Chicago with U. S. troops. Gov. Altgeld protested against having them there. Gov. Penoyer, of Oregon suggested that Charles the 1st lost his head for no greater breach of the laws of the land. Others claimed Debs, President of the A. R. U. was getting to much power and clamored for his arrest, some say he should be hung as a traitor to his country. Others blame Pullman with the whole matter. Debs and sovereign sent a message to Pres. Cleveland, saying they were in favor of keeping the mobs from destroying property and agreeing to aid in doing so. President Cleveland issued a proclimation for every body to keep away from the railroad tracks and allow trains to move.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, D. C., July 6. 1894

The small attendance in both House and Senate shows that lots of Senators and Rpresentatiyes are disposed to extend their holiday over the rest of the week. For the ten days previous to the passage of the tariff bill the Senate certainly had a hard time with daily sessions from 10 to 6 o'clock or later and the thermometer constantly in touching proximity to ninety degrees. It is not surprising that the passage of the bill, a few minutes before the beginning of Independence day, by a vote of 39 to 34 should have been followed by an exodus to the mountains and seashore and that the wilted Senators should be a little slow in returning to their duties. However, no time is really being lost on account of their absence, as the work of preparing the appropriation bills for action is going right along in the appropriation bills for action is going right along in the Senate Appropriation Committee, and the conferees on the part of the Senate on the tariff bill—Senators Voorhees, Harris, Vest, Jones, Sherman, Allison and Aldrich—will be on hand as soon as wanted by the conferees on the part of the House. No surprises were connected with the final vote on the tariff bill, unless the vote of Senator Hill against it can be so considered. The populists divided, Allen and Kyle voting for the bill and Peffer and Stewart against it.

Everybody is speculating on what the result of the conference on the bill will be, and every one is agreed that many changes will be made, but there is no agreement as to the nature of the changes, further than that they are likely to be mostly towards the original Wilson bill. Representative Holman says on the subject: "It is an almost invariable rule that if there is an overwhelming sentiment in the House for a particular line of action it finds expression and overcomes all delays and obstacles of parliamentary procedure. I feel certain that in the issue between the Senate and House the latter will carry the day." Mr. Holman also says that his Congressional experience has taught him to expect considerable delay in tariff conferences between the Senate and the House. Let impatient folk make a note of that.

Representative Bynum, of Indiana, is at the head of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee that is charged with compiling a text book to be used by democratic speakers in the Congressional Campaign. The work is progressing, but cannot be completed until the tariff bill has finally been disposed of by Congress. The choice of Mr. Bynum to direct this work was a happy one. He will be certain to include in the book everything that can help the stump speaker in his arguments, as he believes that the stump speaker is away ahead of the literary bureau as a vote getter, because the average man will listen to a clever speech while he will not read phamplets, however cleverly they may be prepared.

Representative Springer, chairman of the House committee on Banking and Currency, says he considers it extremely doubtful whether the subcommittee recently instructed to prepare and report to the full committee a currency reform bill will complete its work at this session of Congress. One reason for the delay is that Representative Culbertson, of Texas, a member of the sub-committee, has been detained at home by the serious illness of Mrs. Culbertson.

The Grand Jury this week indicted the two newspaper correspondents who decline to give the Senate investigating committee the sources of their information concerning the alledged sugar trust scandal, and, like the two stock brokers previously indicted, they gave bail for their appearance when wanted for trial. The Grand Jury has yet to act upon the cases of Havemeyer and Searles, of the sugar trust, who were also certified for refusing to answer questions. It is expected that the Constitutionality of the law under which these indictments were found will be argued some time in August, and if the law is upheld by the local court the case will be appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court, as it is of the utmost importance that the question should be passed upon our highest court.

Representative Catchings, of Miss., who is a member of the House Committee on Rules and therefore in a position to know, says he does not consider it possible for Congress to adjourn as early as the first of August, but is certain that it will do so very shortly after that date. President Cleveland is commended on all sides for the promptness with which he decided and ordered that Federal troops should be used to prevent the mail service of the country being interfered with by railroad strikers and to back up the authority of U. S. Court officials. The President is kept thoroughly posted, through Attorney General Olney, Postmaster General Bissell and Secretary Lamont, upon every phase of the strike, they being in constant telegraphic communication with their subordinates.

The democrats have no occasion to indulge in gloomy views as to the outcome of the comming election. The big fight in the republican ranks brightens their political horizon, and we need but the white plume, of an undaunted leader to be the oriflamme of the democratic hosts as they rush to the battle. The cloud has shown its silver lining. There is revivication and hope. The thoughts that arise are cheerful, comforting, hopeful. We don't expect a walk over, but we cannot overlook the fact that the warring, the bickerings and the struggle before the republican convention, the disappointed ambitions, the sore heads, the bitterness and dissension which will follow the Convention cannot fail to rend the republican party in twain and give the assurance of victory to to the democrats. It looks like a democratic year, and we have only to exercise wisdom to make it one.

There is abundance of material for candidates who will inspire the democratic masses with the enthusiasm and vim which assures a brilliant fight. Who can doubt that Nugent for sheriff would arrouse the pugnacious qualities of the old guard; that honest Frank McKnight would read a clear title to the treasarer's office: that Isaac Podas could reach the winning post for register: that S. J. Mealey could beat Lamson; that Cutting would leave Tarbox or ony other republican in the gutter for Probate Judge; and M. A. O'Hair would be shouting hurrah when the returns for county Attorney come in. With such a brilliant galaxy of timber there should be no such word as defeat in the democratic vocabulary.

Mr. James McGuire left Wednesday for Atwater to be absent some time.

Editor Tipping has gone over to the populists and from this on the Tribune will advocate populist ideas. Mr. Toppings has been a republican in principle himself, but the Tribune has been enclined to democratic ideas. The GAZETTE has always been a staunch democratic paper and is the only exponent of Jeffersons ideas in the county.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Kvetinsky made a trip to Jordan last week.

W. Jacobs is hustling machinery to the farmers now-a-days.

MAPLE LAKE MENTIONINGS.

The fourth of July celebration at this place passed off very quietly not much amusements going on during the day. The game of ball between Maple Lake and Waverly was not interesting enough to look at; it seemed that the Waverly boys were disgusted with the umpire. Without a doubt the umpire gave Maple Lake two fair hits on foul balls which run in sixth scores. The dance in the afternoon would have been fine, providing the music had been any earthly good; they only hired a cheap band that would not be allowed to play for a country stag dance. The bowery dance at night was a fizzle, but the dance in Dan Flaherty's building was a success and all there report having had a good time, except Mr. A. M. who seemed to be a little bit huffed when some other fellow, not very good looking, had his girl out walking. A. M. showed what speed there was in Mr. Tuberty's horses when taking her home, making the trip, eight miles, in less than forty minutes, Ambras don't trifle with girls that has so many fellows.

FRENCH LAKE FACTS.

A large number of the young ladies of this town that were in Minneapolis came up to spend the 4th with their parents and returned Monday to the cities again. The folks of this town enjoyed the 4th celebration at Lake John in an unusual and splendid manner by a picnic in the day time and a grand dance in the night pleasing to all.

The dance on the platform Saturday night was largely attended and a splendid time reported.

It was amusement to hear the Maple Lake boys on the 4th boast over the first ball game they have won this season.

A large number of the young couple's friends were present. We wish the couple success and prosperity in the struggle of life, may your dark days be few and bright days be numerous.

We heard through the high wind last week that Joseph Cavenaugh, of Corenna has purchased a farm out west, and will start house keeping as soon as he gets the bird.

Charles Yantic is rapidly improving from injuries sustained two weeks ago by coming in contact with a runaway team.

George O'Laughlin is nursing a boil and Miss Annie Larson is doing the same.

We are afraid that we will be struck with a mud shower soon, although we may be wrong it might be only wind but we will let you know latter what the shower consists of if it should happen.

Emal Olsend wrestled the 4th at Kingston, with Mr. Burns, who thought he was the champion of Meeker county but he got left and lost the bet of $10. Ole O. wrestled with a fellow from Eden Valley and came out ahead. The Oslend brothers have never been thrown for the last 12 years by any one that would wrestle side hold or back hold and they have been down to the cities and did not meet their equal.

We ommitted to mention last week that A. J. Lindburg our popular merchant reported with a smile, a daughter.

CUPID'S DARTS.

How One of Them Pierced Two Unwilling Hearts.

"I wouldn't marry the best man that ever lived!" And she meant it, or, what answers the same purpose, she thought she meant it. After all, how very few of us really know what we mean. "I engaged myself once when a girl, and the simpleton thought he owned me. I soon took the conceit out of him and sent him away about his business." The voice was now a little sharp. What wonder, with so galling a memory? "No man shall ever tyrannize over me—never! What the mischief do you suppose is the matter with the sewing machine?"

"Annoyed at your logic, most likely," said my friend, a bright young matron, as she threaded her needle. "My husband is not a tyrant, Miss Kent."

"I am glad you are satisfied," was the laconic reply.

It was evident by the expression of the dressmaker's face that she had formed her own opinion about my friend's husband, and was quite competent to form and express an opinion on any subject. Miss Kent was a little woman, fair as a girl and plump as a robin. She wasn't ashamed to own that she was forty years old and an old maid. She had earned her own living most of her life, and was proud of it. She was a good nurse, a faithful friend and a jolly companion; but stroke her the wrong way, and you'd wish you hadn't in much shorter time than it takes to write it. Her views on all subjects were strikingly original and not to be combated.

"What are you going to do when you are old?" persisted the mistress of the establishment.

"What other folks do, I suppose."

"But you can't work forever."

"Can't say that I want to."

"Now, Miss Kent, a husband with means, a kind, intelligent man—"

"I don't want any man. I tell you, Mrs. Carlisle, I wouldn't marry the best man living, if he was as rich as Crœsus and would die if I didn't have him. Now, if you have exhausted the marriage question, I should like to try on your dress."

There was something behind all this. I knew well. My friend's eyes danced with fun, and as Miss Kent fitted the waist she threw me a letter from the bureau.

"Read that," she said, with a knowing look. "It may amuse you."

"MY DEAR JENNIE: I shall be delighted to spend a month with you and your husband. There must, however, be one stipulation about my visit—you must say no more about marriage. I shall never be foolish again. Twenty years ago to-day I wrecked my whole life. ('Better embark in a new ship,' hadn't he?' put in Jennie, sotto voice.) So unsuitable was this marriage, so utterly and entirely wretched have been its consequence, that I am forced to believe the marriage institution a mistake. So, for the last time, let me assure you that I wouldn't marry the best woman that ever lived, if by so doing I could save her life. Your old cousin, MARK LANSING."

"Rich, isn't he?" said Jennie, and then pointed to the chubby little figure whose back happened to be turned.

I shook my head and laughed.

"You'll see," said the incorrigible.

"See what?" inquired Miss Kent, quite unaware of the pantomime.

"That parties which are chemically attracted will unite. Of course, an alkali and an acid. Don't you think this sleeve a little too long, Miss Kent?"

"Not after the seam is off. But what were you saying, Mrs. Carlisle? The other day, at Prof. Boynton's I saw some wonderful experiments."

"And did they succeed?" inquired Jennie, demurely.

"Beautifully."

"So will mine. I never yet botched a job in my life."

"I don't quite understand you," replied Miss Kent, perplexed.

"No? I always grow scientific when talking about marriage, my dear."

"Bother!" was all the little woman said, but the tone was much better natured than I expected.

The next week Cousin Mark arrived, and I liked him at once. An unhappy marriage would have been the last thing thought of in connection with that gentleman. He had accepted the situation like a man, Jennie told me, and for fifteen years carried a load of misery that few could have endured. Death came to him at last, and now the poor fellow actually believed himself an alien from domestic happiness.

Singularly as it may appear, Cousin Mark was the embodiment of good health and good nature; fifty, perhaps, though he didn't look it, and as rotund and as fresh in his way as the little dressmaker was in hers. As I looked at him I defied anybody to see one and not be reminded of the other. True, he had more of the polish which comes from travel and adaptation to different classes and individuals, but he was not a whit more intelligent by nature than the bright little woman whom Jennie determined he should marry.

"I was surprised you should think it necessary to caution me about that, Cousin Mark," cooed the plotter, as she stood by his side looking out of the window. "The idea of my being so ridiculous!" and in the same breath, with a wink at me: "Come, let us go to my sitting-room. We are at work there, but it won't make any difference to you, will it?"

Of course, Cousin Mark said: "No," promptly, as innocent as a dove about the trap being laid for him.

"This is my cousin, Mr. Lansing, Miss Kent."

Mr. Lansing bowed politely and Miss Kent rose, dropped her scissors, blushed and sat down again. Cousin Mark picked up the refractory implements and then Mrs. Carlisle proceeded, with rare caution and tact, to her labor of love. Cousin Mark, at her request, read aloud an article from the Science Monthly, drawing Miss Kent into the discussion as deftly as was ever a fly drawn into the web of a spider.

"Who is that lady, Jennie?" Cousin Mark inquired in the evening.

"You mean Miss Kent?" said Jennie, looking up from her paper. "Oh, she is a lady; I have known her for a long time. She is making some dresses for me now. Why?"

"She seems uncommonly well posted for a woman."

Under any other circumstances Mrs. Carlisle would have resented this, but now she only queried: "Do you think so?" and that ended it.

Two or three invitations to the sewing-room were quite sufficient to make Cousin Mark at home there, and after a week he become familiar enough to say:

"If you are not too busy, I should like to read you this article."

"Oh, I'm never too busy to be read to," Miss Kent would say. "Sit down by the window in this comfortable chair and let's hear it."

After a couple of weeks, when the gentleman came in hoarse with a sudden cold, Miss Kent bustled about, her voice full of sympathy, and brewed him a dose which he declared he should not forget to his dying day; but one dose cured. After this occurrence Miss Kent was a really wonderful woman.

Ah, what an arch plotter! She let them skirmish about, but not for once did she give them a chance to be alone together. Her plans were not to be destroyed by premature confidence until the very evening preceding Cousin Mark's departure for California. Then Miss Kent was very demurely asked to remain and keep an eye on Master Carlisle, whom the fond mother did not like to leave quite alone with his nurse.

"We are compelled to be gone a couple of hours," she said, "but Cousin Mark will read to you, won't you, cousin?"

"Certainly, if Miss Kent would like it," replied the gentleman.

The infant Carlisle, thanks to good management, was never awake in the evening, so the victims of this matrimonial speculation would have plenty of time. The back parlor was the room most in use during the evening, and out of that room was a large closet, with a large blind elevator, and out of this closet a door leading to the stoop and garden. Imagine my surprise when I was told that Mr. Carlisle was going to the lodge, and that we, after profuse warnings about the baby and promises not to be gone too long, were to proceed to this closet overlooking the back parlor by way of the back gate and garden. In vain I protested.

"Oh, you little goosie," said Jennie, laughing; "there'll be fun enough to last us a lifetime. John wanted to come awfully, but I knew he'd make an awful noise and spoil everything, so I wouldn't let him."

The wily schemer took the precaution to lock the closet door from the outside, so there was no fear of detection. On a high bench, as still as two mice, we waited results.

Presently Cousin Mark, as if arousing from a protracted revery, asked:

"Would you like to have me read?"

"Oh, I am not particular," replied Miss Kent.

"Here is an excellent article on elective affinities. How would you like that?"

Jennie's elbow in my side almost took away my breath.

"Who is it by?" she inquired.

Jennie exclaimed—clear in my ear: "That's to gain time! see if it isn't. Now for something interesting."

"It's by a prominent French writer, I believe," answered Cousin Mark.

"I don't think I care for a translation to-night," said Miss Kent.

"Nor I; nor reading of any kind," he continued. "This is my last evening in New York, Miss Kent."

"I hope you've enjoyed your visit," she returned.

Jennie — into my very head this time—"She is as shy as a three-year-old colt."

"I didn't think I should feel so bad about leaving," Cousin Mark went on. "He is the wreck, you remember," whispered Jennie.

A long pause.

"I think I hear the baby," exclaimed Miss Kent.

"Oh, no," said Cousin Mark. "You are fond of babies, are you not, Miss Kent?"

No answer from Miss Kent.

"I have been a very lonely man, Miss Kent," Cousin Mark resumed, "but never realized how lonely the rest of my life must be until I came to this house."

"Oh, how lonely!" echoed Jennie.

"Now I must return to my business and my boarding house—boarding house for a man so fond of domestic life as I am, Miss Kent."

Just then we distinctly heard a little kind of purr, which sounded very like a note of intense sympathy from Miss Kent.

"I have friends in San Francisco, of course," said Cousin Mark, "but no fireside like this—no one to care for me if I'm ill, nobody to feel very badly if I die."

"That'll fetch her," said Jennie.

"I wish that I lived in San Francisco," said Miss Kent, in a little quivering voice. "You could call upon me at any time if you needed anything."

Jennie in convulsions.

"If you will go to California with me, Miss Kent, I'll wait another week."

"Why, Mr. Lansing, what do you mean? What would folks say?" she said.

"We don't care for folks," said Mark. "If you will go we will have a house as pleasant as money can make it. You shall have birds, and flowers, and horses, and all the scientific monthlies that you want, deuced if you shan't; and you shall never sew another stitch for anybody but me. Will you be my wife?"

Just then Jennie and I stepped up another peg and there was that little old maid, who would not marry the best man that ever lived, hugged close to the man's breast who wouldn't marry the best woman that ever lived, not even to save her life. We came away then, but my opinion is that they remained in that position till we rang the bell about half an hour later.

"How did you know?" I asked of Jennie.

"My dear," she answered, "my whole reliance was upon human nature; and, let me tell you, dear goosie, whatever else may fail, that never does."

"Why, Miss Kent, what makes your face so very red?" inquired Jennie, upon entering. "And, Cousin Mark, how strangely you look. Your hair is all mussed up."

"And I hope to have it mussed up often," said Cousin Mark, boldly. "Miss Kent and I are to be married this week."

Jennie laughed until her face was purple, and when I went upstairs Miss Kent was pounding her back.—N. Y. Journal.

A FAULT OF FADDISTS.

The Ignoble and Widely-Practiced Art of Exaggeration.

Faddists are the masters of the ignoble art of exaggeration. If one wishes to avoid exaggeration, one is careful to measure one's speech; one is never in extremes. Faddists seldom measure their speech; they are almost invariably in extremes. Teetotalers, anti-smokers, anti-vaccinators, anti-everythingites, vegetarians, the people who would "put down" fiction, the rational enjoyments of the Sunday theaters, dancing, cards, billiards, so many of the things which make life worth the living; if these people did not exaggerate, they would forever hold their peace. Unfortunately, exaggeration is too often their only weapon. The clear, dry light of truth is not for them. They could not live in such an atmosphere for an hour. It would be well if our weak-kneed brethren could be brought to understand what a plain and certain fact this is. It might bring peace and comfort to their minds.

The more attentively one considers the subject the more clearly one perceives how almost universally prevalent is the vice of exaggeration. One supposes it is a vice. There are the clerics at one end and the politicians at the other; the clerics of all the creeds. There is the Mohammedan, who tells you that if you do not do certain things certain other dreadful things will happen. There is the Buddhist, who assures you of the paramount, and, indeed, vital necessity which exists why you should do certain altogether different and entirely incompatible things. And the same positive, and, in truth, superlative assertions meet one nearer home. The religious atmosphere, all the world over, is too apt to be crowded with exaggerations. One seldom enters a place of worship, belonging to any one of our nine hundred and ninety-nine different sects, without hearing at least—well, say one exaggeration, uttered by the parson in the pulpit. This may seem a dreadful thing to say. But though 'tis true, 'tis pity, pity 'tis 'tis true.

We get on to safer ground when we approach the politicians. Everyone recognizes that there is exaggeration among them. We all of us have radical friends who will be the first to allow that the tories habitually deal in what it would be courtesy to call exaggerations; while that the radicals are, of their nature, compeled to exaggerate, none will be readier to admit than the tories. If, on the other hand, you go to a third person, an individual who cries a plague on both their houses, you will find him prepared to concede that both parties—all sides—exaggerate alike. And, possibly, that third person will not be so far out as he might be. One is almost forced to the painful conclusion that faddists, clerics, and politicians make what may be called a trade of exaggeration.—All the Year Round.

LEFT ITS IMPRESS.

Marks of the Glacial Period in the Gorge of the Ohio.

Above Louisville, Ky., the large cities upon the Ohio strikingly reveal the limitations imposed upon them by the character of the river valley. Having begun as a cluster of houses upon the river's bank, they have gradually spread back upon it until reaching the base of the rocky precipices. With the rapid growth, both of population and of improvements in later years, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh have literally overflowed their banks and risen to the summit of the hills on either side, the inhabitants being transported from their places of business to their residences by long inclines up which the street cars are drawn at a steep angle to a height of from 300 to 500 feet; from which positions extended views are given in every direction over the broken surface, whose summits represent the once comparatively level area. At Parker City, Pa., an elevator was once used to lift foot travelers from the lower terrace to the upper terrace, 200 feet above.

Although flowing in so deep a trough, the present Ohio river is considerably elevated above the ancient bottom. This is owing to the fact that during the glacial period such an excessive amount of gravel was brought down from the Alleghany river and other northern tributaries that the old channel was silted up to a considerable depth. At Cincinnati there is more than one hundred feet of gravel between the present river bottom and the rock bottom. Below the mouths of the most important northern tributaries the accumulations were much greater than this. At Cincinnati the channel was choked with gravel from the Little Miama to a height of one hundred and twenty feet above the present river. Subsequently this was partly eroded away, leaving the one-hundred-and-twenty-foot gravel terrace which is now occupied by Fourth street.—Prof. G. F. Wright, in Popular Science Monthly.

England Produces the Tallest Men.

According to an investigation conducted under the auspices of the International Society of Anthropologists, of London, which has concluded a valuable inquiry respecting the average height of the various races and nationalities, English and American citizens average taller than any other representatives of the human family. The following has been gleaned from their one hundred and twenty page report: The English professional classes, who head the list as the tallest of adult males, attain the high average of five feet nine and one-fourteenth inches. Next on the list comes the males of all classes in the United States, and a minute fraction behind them come the English of all classes. Hence we may conclude that, taken as a whole, the British and their English-speaking cousins in America are approximately of the same height. In other European countries the average for the male adult is but five feet six inches. The Austrians, the Portuguese and the Spaniards fall somewhat below the general European average as given in the foregoing.—St. Louis Republic.

THE GREAT STRIKE.

Serious Aspect of Affairs in Chicago and the Country Generally.

Federal Authorities Arrayed Against the Rioters—Scenes of Violence and Arson—Fatal Conflicts with the Regulars—Mob Rule at Hammond, Ind.

THE MOB VICTORIOUS.

CHICAGO, July 7.—Chief Deputy Marshal Donnelly, backed by a force of regular soldiers, attempted to get a train of cattle out of the stock yards. The strikers came out victorious, and four hours after the start the cattle were returned to the yards and unloaded.

Battle for a Train.

UNION STOCK YARDS, Ill., July 7.—At 10 o'clock a. m. the Michigan Central attempted to run out a live stock train of seventeen cars. This move was opposed by a mob of nearly 8,000 men and boys. The police, unabled to command the situation, sent to Dexter park for the United States troops. Two companies were sent, but were insufficient. At 11 o'clock troops B and K of the Seventh cavalry and light battery E of the First artillery with three guns, responded.

The Gatling guns were placed in a position so that they commanded a clear space on the tracks for three block. At 11:45 the train started under a military escort. The strikers again obstructed it by overturning three box cars on the tracks. This obstruction was removed. The cavalry led the way while the infantry strung out Indian file alongside the entire length of the train. The train was again stalled, and the troops charged the crowd with bayonets.

Attacked a Train.

The mob of strikers and sympathizers which had been derailing cars in the stock yards district, after successfully stalling the Michigan Central freight train on Fortieth street, proceeded to the Pittsburgh & Fort Wayne tracks at Fortieth street where they held up an incoming train, compelled all passengers to leave the cars and then dragged the engineer and fireman from the cab. They then broke all the glass in the cab and derailed the engine. The mob then ran up to Fortieth and Clark streets and set fire to the Lake Shore signal house. All this time the United States troops were up at Halsted street guarding the Michigan Central train.

Fought Its Way Through.

Fighting every inch of way, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railroad brought three passenger trains through from Blue Island Thursday. Bayonets, revolvers and police clubs were used against the mobs which at times filled the right of way, and the mob fought back by overturning freight cars in front of the line of trains.

Between Fifty-first street and Twenty-fifth street over twenty-five box cars were thrown across the tracks, for the mob ran ahead and upset the cars faster than the railroad officials could clear the tracks. The train left Blue Island at 9:30 o'clock in the morning and arrived at the Rock Island depot at 7:15 o'clock in the evening, using over ten hours in traveling less than 16 miles.

Driving Out Tower Men.

A mob numbering 1,000 started on its way north towards the center of the city and drove all the tower and signal men out of the towers on all the roads leading to the Polk street depot and the Fort Wayne road which parallel them. The men went out without exception. Another large gang started for the Rock Island and Lake Shore tracks to order out the signal and tower men of those roads. Troops are located at the point where these mobs started from but did nothing to prevent their leaving as they claimed they had to give their attention to getting out the Michigan Central train.

The Situation.

CHICAGO, July 9.—Gov. Altgeld on Friday ordered out the First and Third brigades of the militia to report to Mayor Hopkins to aid in suppressing riots. The militia were wanted for police duty, therefore the mayor turned it over to the police officials.

Available Force in the City.

Three hundred extra policemen have been sworn in, increasing the police force to 3,300. There are in the neighborhood of 1,000 deputy United States marshals in active service, and half that number of deputy sheriffs. The Leavenworth regulars, 300 strong, and those from Fort Brady, 150 strong, arrived Friday morning. The force available in the city Friday night was therefore roughly as follows:

|---|---|
| Militia | 3,000 |
| Police | 3,300 |
| Regulars | 1,000 |
| Deputy sheriffs | 500 |
| Deputy marshals | 1,000 |
| Total | 8,000 |

Detachments of the regulars did service in several parts of the South side, but maintained their camp on the lake front as a reserve.

Daily Losses of the Roads.

At the meeting of the General Managers' association reports of daily losses to the different roads were submitted. The sum total is appalling, but the managers say if it were ten times greater they still would stay in the fight to the end. Here is a table showing what the railroad companies are losing each day:

|---|---|
| Chicago & Alton | $ 16,000 |
| Baltimore & Ohio | 8,000 |
| Chicago & Northwestern | 14,000 |
| Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe | 20,000 |
| Wisconsin Central | 9,000 |
| Chicago & Calumet Terminal | 18,000 |
| Chicago & Northern Pacific | 20,000 |
| Chicago, Burlington & Quincy | 20,000 |
| Chicago & Eastern Illinois | 15,000 |
| Illinois Central | 30,000 |
| Nickel Plate | 4,000 |
| Michigan Central | 2,000 |
| Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul | 8,000 |
| Fort Wayne (and Pan Handle) | 15,000 |
| Wabash | 15,000 |
| Grand Trunk | 5,000 |
| Rock Island | 11,000 |
| Maple Leaf | 8,000 |
| Mohon | 2,000 |
| Total | $250,000 |

APPLIED THE TORCH.

Strikers Burn Hundreds of Cars at the Chicago Stock Yards.

From Brighton Park to Sixty-first street the yards of the Pan-Handle road were Friday night put to the torch by the rioters. Between 600 and 700 freight cars have been destroyed, many of them loaded. Miles and miles of costly track are a snarled tangle of heat-twisted rails. Not less than $750,000—possibly a whole $1,000,000 of property—has been sacrificed to the caprice of the rioters.

A Night of Terror.

The frenzied mob applied the torch indiscriminately. From Halsted street to Elsdon, and then to Blue Island on the Grand Trunk road, they spiked switches and upset shanties and freight trains, to which they applied the torch. Before doing so it was seen that they had taken precautions to prevent property from being saved. Electric light wires were severed and the town plunged into darkness. Empty cartridge shells were forced into the keyholes of the fire alarm boxes When the fire department reached the scene after an alarm it was to find everything in cinders. The Ashland avenue depot was fired and when an effort was made to save it the mob opposed the firemen, uncoupled the hose and hurled bricks and stones.

THE SCENE CHANGED.

Riotous Demonstrations of the Mobs at Kensington, Ill.

CHICAGO, July 9.—The rioting broke out early Friday morning. The scene of the principal tumult changed from Lake to Kensington. In the town which lies over against Pullman and is inhabited principally by laboring men and their families the mob began to gather in force, growing in such numbers as almost to overshadow the large force of deputies. The officers stood in a frightful hail of stones and coupling pins. Rioters charged repeatedly on the marshal's and the sheriff's men. Freight trains were derailed and thrown across the track. Thousands of strikers came over from Pullman and engaged in the work of destruction.

STONED BY THE MOB.

Rioters Wantonly Attack a Number of Passenger Trains.

CHICAGO, July 9.—The most dastardly act of violence committed by the strikers near the yards Friday occurred on the Fort Wayne tracks between Thirty-seventh and Thirty-eighth streets at 10:50, when a mob stoned a suburban train filled with men, women and children. The police in command of Capt. O'Neill and Lieut. Fitzpatrick charged the crowd and fired all the shots in their revolvers over the heads of the mob. This was the first shot fired by the police in the strike. One unknown striker was shot in the back. Two men were arrested by the police. It was a most astounding piece of work on the part of the mob. The train did not stop, but kept on its way toward the city. Every window in the cars was shattered and a number of people must have been hurt by the fusillade of rocks that filled the air.

Shot by the Troops.

CHICAGO, July 10.—The first real battle of the strikers occurred Saturday afternoon. A detail of thirty-eight members of the Illinois national guard was sent to clear the debris from the tracks of the Grand Trunk road. At Forty-ninth and Loomis streets the mob became abusive and demonstrative. A bayonet charge was ordered. This was followed by two volleys. In the last volley the soldiers shot to kill; as a result three strikers are dead, many more are wounded, and five soldiers suffered from contusions received by stones thrown by the rioters.

Another Fatal Conflict.

During the early part of the evening a conflict ensued between members of company D., Fifteenth United States infantry, and a body of strikers who were engaged in overturning and burning cars in the Pan-Handle yards. The soldiers fired on the mob and one man was killed.

Attempted Arson.

Early Saturday evening a malicious attempt was made to burn the great packing houses in the stock yards, but the fire was extinguished after a hard fight before a serious property loss had been entailed. The rest of the fires kindled by rioters during the day were confined to guerrilla attacks on freight cars in the outlying yards of the railroads.

Fatal Fight at Hammond, Ind.

Mob rule at Hammond was broken Sunday only after a bloody battle. Thousands of rioters were on the scene. The track from yard to yard and crossing to crossing was strewn with overturned freight cars, battered and burned coaches, twisted rails and broken switches. Non-union trainmen were assaulted and beaten. Telegraph instruments were destroyed. Electric light wires were cut. Police, deputies and marshals were powerless. Rioters numbered a hundred to their one. Company D. Fifteenth regiment of the United States infantry, arrived at 11 a. m. An armed peace was then sustained until 4 o'clock. Then the mob grew desperate again. The regulars opened fire and one man was killed and four wounded. The rioters wavered but soon rallied and would probably have annihilated the little band had not reinforcements arrived from Chicago. The appearance of fresh troops caused the mob to retire to a safe spot. Sixteen companies of Indiana militia, numbering 800 men, were started from points in northern Indiana for Hammond. The two governors of Indiana and Illinois decided to use the militia of the two states in conjunction for putting down the insurrection at Hammond.

Protest to the President.

President Debs, on behalf of the A. R. U., and Grand Master Workman Sovereign, of the Knights of Labor, have joined in a telegram to President Cleveland in which, after making an explicit and concise statement of the causes of the strike and the situation as it is, ask to have the federal troops withdrawn from Chicago. They say their presence is an insult to honest labor and has merely augmented the feeling of unrest. They proclaim their fidelity to the American flag, and pledge the support of the organizations which they represent in preserving the peace.

IT SPREADS.

The Great Strike Rapidly Sweeping Toward the East.

CLEVELAND, O., July 9.—Local railway men decided almost unanimously to go out. At 6 a. m. every man obeyed the order to quit, and not a freight wheel is turning in the Cleveland yards.

Detroit Lines Are Idle.

DETROIT, Mich., July 9.—Every railroad in Detroit was tied up after 10:30 Friday night in accordance with the action of the joint meeting of representatives of all the local brotherhoods. All the railway firemen, switchmen, yardmen, brakemen and freight handlers in the city went out. The engineers and conductors did not strike, but it will be impossible to operate trains, as the engineers will not work with non-union firemen. The Michigan Central, which had heretofore been free from the strike locally, is tied up.

New York Is Alarmed.

NEW YORK, July 9.—All vacations in the police department have been stopped by order of Superintendent Byrnes, and all members of the force, from captain down, who had left the city on their vacations, have been summoned by telegraph to return forthwith.

Refuse to Strike.

PEORIA, Ill., July 9.—The switchmen in the Peoria & Pekin union yards have voted to remain at work and handle all freight. They say they have no grievance and will not go out.

A REIGN OF TERROR.

Established by Foreigners at Spring Valley, Ill.

PRINCETON, Ill., July 10.—The general merchandise store of the White Breast Fuel company at Ladd was thoroughly looted Saturday night by a mob of 1,200 alien miners from Spring Valley. The mob was composed of Lithuanians, Poles, Belgians and Italians, being of the same class that has caused the depredations at Spring Valley, and most of them the same men.

Deputies Save Seatonville.

Following the destruction of company stores at Spring Valley and Ladd the miners had in mind the looting of the company store at Seatonville. For this purpose a division left Spring Valley and Ladd in small groups, and by 7 o'clock Sunday evening had amassed a force of several hundred on the bluffs near Seeatonville. In the meantime Sheriff Cox returned to Princeton and eighty men were selected and deputized They were also furnished with rifles and ammunition that the governor had furnished and started in wagons for Seatonville. The miners learning the strength of the deputies retreated to Spring Valley. The deputies then pressed on and reached Spring Valley after midnight.

In Possession of Spring Valley.

At Spring Valley the striking miners has had possession of the city. Sunday morning a meeting was held on the Rock Island tracks east of town at which the non-English-speaking men predominated. It was resolsed to effectually stop traffic on the railroads passing through Spring Valley, and the meeting broke up for the purpose of carrying out the resolution.

Seeking Places of Safety.

Over the east half of the county a reign of terror has set in and woman and children have been leaving the towns in that section in large numbers. Valuable property of all kinds is being secreted. At Seatonville Sunday night, a village, of 1,200 people, there were scarcely enough women in the town to prepare supper for the deputies.

In Possession of Spring Valley.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., July 9.—Sheriff Cook, of Bureau county, telegraphed Gov. Altgeld giving a statement of the situation at Spring Valley, and asking that troops be sent to aid him in restoring quiet. A similar dispatch was received from Sheriff Taylor, of La Salle county, who said he needed troops to help him defend the cities of Peru and La Salle, threatened with invasion by the mob. The governor issued orders for companies A and C of the Sixth infantry to proceed at once to Spring Valley and cooperate with the sheriffs of Bureau and La Salle counties in suppressing violence and restoring order.

FLATLY REFUSED.

The Pullman Company Again Rejects Overtures of Peace.

CHICAGO, July 11.—The final answer of the Pullman company has been given its employes. No proposition for an adjustment of the differences existing between the company and the strikers by arbitration will be entertained. Vice President Wickes was waited upon by a joint committee of aldermen and workingmen at 4 o'clock Monday afternoon. To the overtures made tending toward arbitration he firmly replied that the Pullman company would not recede from the stand it had taken. The refusal of the company to entertain any proposition for arbitration was in direct defiance of the order of the mass meeting of union delegates Sunday night, and a strike of the allied trades will be instituted to-morrow morning unless some adjustment of the difficulties is made to-day. This, however, is improbable, as Mr. Wickes left no room to doubt that the company would stand on the ground which it has taken.

Naval Militia Called Into Action.

The First battalion of the Illinois naval militia was ordered out Monday by Adjt. Gen. Orendorff. The battalion numbers 250 men and at least 230 will be pressed into service. It will be the duty of the battalion to guard the waterworks, crib and public wharves

Negroes Filling Vacancies.

Monday morning the Rock Island company distributed a car load of negroes in the towers along the road from Twenty-sixth street south. A crowd of excited strikers gathered around the tower houses at the different street corners and threatened to kill the negroes if they did not leave the tower houses. At noon a mob was vainly trying to burn the buildings when a company of troops arrived and dispersed the crowds. The recent action of the American Railway union in voting to exclude colored men from their ranks has caused considerable hard feeling among the negroes and it is said they will fill the positions vacated by the strikers whenever possible.

Michigan Men Return.

DETROIT, Mich., July 11.—The strike in the Michigan Central yards came to an end Monday when every employe who had been disaffected returned to work. At the Union depot the situation is unchanged. No Wabash trains arrived or departed during the morning. The Flint & Pere Marquette and Detroit, Lansing & Northern passenger trains are running on time.

Censured the Soldiers.

HAMMOND, Ind., July 11.—A coroner's inquest was held on the body of Charles Fleischman, who was killed Sunday in the volley which the regulars poured into the mob, and a verdict returned that deceased came to his death by a bullet fired by certain United States soldiers, said shooting being careless, unnecessary, unwarranted and criminal.

A Militia Company Strikes.

TACOMA, Wash., July 11.—Troop A, of the Second regiment of national guards, of Washington, refused to ride on a Northern Pacific train manned by non-union crews. The entire troop, consisting of sixty men, was placed under arrest, loaded in a box car and taken east with the train carrying the balance of the state militia en route from the state camp. When Troop A arrives at Sprague it will be court-martialed. All of the troopers will resign, however, on reaching home.

Cost of the Strike.

Outside the question of the turmoil of the strike itself is another serious factor. The strike is costing the country many millions of dollars. The dispatches printed from a majority of the towns give an estimate of the losses thus far entailed to the business interests of the several communities. Figures compiled from these estimates show that the loss to business and the loss in wages of strikers aggregate $28,000,000. The estimate is believed to be low. The showing seems to indicate that George M. Pullman's refusal to arbitrate and the efforts of the A. R. U. to force him to are costing the country $2,300,000 a day. The number of men thrown out of employment, both by railroads and manufacturing establishments which have been forced to shut down through lack of fuel and raw material, runs in the neighborhood of 50,000. Vice President Howard, of the A. R. U., estimated the railroad men on strike to number 51,900

Notes.

At the request of Mayor Hopkins Gov. Altgeld has ordered twelve more companies of Illinois militia to Chicago.

The strike at Indianapolis was materially extended Monday by the walking out of the firemen, brakemen and switchmen of the St. Louis division of the Big Four road. They were persuaded to quit by an agent of President Debs.

Terre Haute business interests are suffering in an exceptional manner. None of the roads have received freight at this point for a week, but as the switchmen have not gone out at Indianapolis freight is received there and delivered to customers of Terre Haute houses all around the city.

THREE ARE KILLED.

Two Women and a Man Slain by Shot from the Militia.

DANVILLE, Ill., July 11.—Wor' was received from Grape Creek, 5 miles south of here, that several cars on side tracks of a branch of the C. & E. I. had been derailed. An engine and crew were sent out to clear the line. At 10 a. m. the Shelbyville train arriving at Westville station, 2 miles from Grape Creek, was surrounded by a crowd of miners out on a sympathetic strike. A company of militia stationed at Danville junction proceeded to the scene. About a mile from Westville a large crowd of miners began warlike demonstrations. Several pistol shots from the crowd were returned by a volley from the soldiers on the train.

Miss Clara James, the 17-year-old daughter of Jonas James, was seated at the organ in her house. A random bullet struck her just below the right breast and she died almost instantly. Mrs. Michael Glennan, a widow, was crossing her garden. Two bullets struck her and she died in five minutes. An unknown man received a mortal body wound and died in a short time. Resistance developing, the militia left the train and charged the crowd, securing three prisoners. The crowd dispersing and no further resistance being offered, the troops returned to their train, which had been coupled in front of the passenger, and the trip to Danville was made without further incident.

A PROCLAMATION.

President Cleveland Warns the People of Chicago and Illinois.

WASHINGTON, July 10.—The following dispatch was sent from the war department to Gen. Miles at Chicago Sunday evening:

"In view of the provisions of the statutes and for the purpose of giving ample warning to all innocent and well-disposed persons, the president has deemed it best to issue the following proclamation to-night. This does not change the scope of your authority and duties, nor your relation to the local authorities. You will please make this known to Mayor Hopkins."

Just before midnight President Cleveland issued the following:

"PROCLAMATION

"By the President of the United States:

"Whereas, By reason of the unlawful obstructions, combinations and assemblages of persons it has become impracticable, in the judgment of the president, to enforce by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings the laws of the United States within the state of Illinois, and especially in the city of Chicago, within said state; and

"Whereas, For the purpose of enforcing the faithful execution of the laws of the United States and protecting its property and removing obstructions to the United States mails in the state and city aforesaid, the president has employed a part of the military of the United States.

"Now, therefore, I, Grover Cleveland, president of the United States, do hereby admonish all good citizens and all persons who may be or may come within the city and state aforesaid, against aiding, countenancing, encouraging or taking part in such unlawful obstructions, combinations and assemblages; and I hereby warn all persons engaged in or in any way connected with such unlawful obstructions, combinations and assemblages, to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes on or before 12 o'clock noon on the 9th day of July inst.

"Those who disregard this warning and persist in taking part with a riotous mob in forcibly resisting and obstructing the execution of the laws of the United States, or interfering with the functions of the government, or destroying, or attempting to destroy the property belonging to the United States or under its protection, cannot be regarded otherwise than as public enemies.

"Troops employed against such a riotous mob will act with all the moderation and forbearance consistent with the accomplishment of the desired end; but the necessity that confronts them will not with certainty permit discrimination between guilty participants and those who are mingled with them from curiosity and without criminal intent. The only safe course, therefore, for those not actually unlawfully participating is to abide at their homes, or at least not to be found in the neighborhood of riotous assemblages.

"While there will be no hesitation or vacillation in the decisive treatment of the guilty, this warning is especially intended to protect and save the innocent.

"GROVER CLEVELAND."

ANOTHER PROCLAMATION.

The President Also Warns Rioters in the Far West.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—After the president returned from his drive Monday evening he found Secretary Gresham and the attorney general and Postmaster General Bissell and Gen. Schofield awaiting him in the cabinet room. Their information was of such a nature that within an hour after the president reached the white house another proclamation was drafted. This related to the troubles in North Dakota, Idaho, Utah territory and other points along the line of the Central and Southern Pacific railways. In his latest proclamation the president of the United States directs all people to cease interfering with United States mail trains or interstate commerce traffic by 4 o'clock to-day.

Commenting upon the proclamations issued by the president Gen. Schofield said that they did not in any way affect the authority of state or federal officers, but were merely in the nature of warnings to the people. This warning was necessary and proper, but was not tantamount to a declaration of martial law. Under martial law the authority of state officials would be superseded by federal authority.

PEFFER'S RESOLUTIONS.

Wants Government Control of Railways, Mines, Money and Uniform Wages.

WASHINGTON, July 10.—In the senate Senator Peffer offered an omnibus resolution providing: 1. That all public functions ought to be exercised through public agents. 2. That all interstate railroads ought to be brought under one control and the supervision of public officers, and charges for train transportation of persons and property throughout the United States ought to be uniform and that wages of employes ought to be regulated by law and paid promptly in money. 3. That all coal beds ought to be owned and worked by the government, and that the wages of the employes should be paid in money when due. 4. That all money used by the people ought to be supplied only by the government of the United States and that the rate of interest ought to be uniform in all states. 5. That all revenues of the government ought to be raised by taxes on real estate. The resolution went over until to-day without action or comment.

Terrible Results of a Fight Between Factions at Catlettsburg, Ky.

CATLETTSBURG, Ky., July 10.—In a street encounter here John and Ballard Faulkner, brothers, were instantly killed, and Charles Justice was killed and Dave Justice fatally wounded. Ballard Plymale was also seriously wounded. Plymale is now in jail, together with Lou Cole, a member of the Cincinnati lumber firm of C. Crane & Co., who was with the Justice faction. The trouble arose over a woman who was sick upon the street and who, the Justice boys claimed, was being neglected by the town authorities. Ballard Faulkner was a member of the council.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Arrested.

James H. Burns, ex-county auditor of Ramsey County was arrested upon two charges of grand larceny.

The two indictments returned by the grand jury against him were for the larceny of $1,820.40 from the Second National Bank, and of $1,100 from the Union Bank. The transaction involving the Second National Bank, which was first brought to the notice of the general public over a week ago, was one whereby, it is stated, that Mr. Burns, through a false voucher for county printing which had never been done, "bilked" the bank of the sum named. This voucher represented that there was due from the county to James H. Burns, as proprietor of the St. Paul Herald, $1,820.40, and the claim was audited by James H. Burns as county auditor and made the basis of a loan from the bank. The nature of the operation involving the Union Bank is not definitely known.

Camp Release.

The Camp Release monument, erected at Montevideo to commemorate the surrender of the hostile Sioux to Gen. Sibley in 1862, and the release of 269 captives, mostly women and children, was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies. The monument, which is of St. Cloud granite, stands 51 feet high and stands on a solid block of granite 8 feet square. On either side are appropriate inscriptions. There were some 2,000 persons present, many of whom were soldiers who participated in the campaign, while many of the captives rescued by the troops were also in attendance. E. J. Hodgson, of St. Paul, delivered the oration of the day. Gen. C. C. Andrews also spoke, and in the absence of Gov. Nelson, Atty. Gen. Childs received the monument on behalf of the state. Gov. Austin reviewed the scenes on the ground as the captives were released and gave a picture of Camp Release as it then appeared.

Burned to Death.

Mrs. Aug. Carlson, at South St. Paul, was so badly burned that death soon ensued. During the afternoon she had been using some kerosene oil, and some of it was spilled on her clothes. At supper time, while lighting the fire to prepare the evening meal, her dress became ignited and in a moment was ablaze. She then rushed toward the door and attempted to put it out, or get off her clothes, but the draft from the door fanned the flames into a blaze that soon spread all over her. She screamed for help, being alone at the time, and neighbors came over, but her entire clothing was burned off before help arrived, and her skin was so badly burned in places that it dropped off.

DELANO DIARY

--If you have money to invest read the "Notice of Sale of Delano Bonds."

—John Cunningham, on Monday, had a terrible cheek on him, one eye was entirely closed from view; he looked as if Corbett had struck him. He claims it was only a hornets nest he got too near.

—Annual School meeting will be held in the City Hall, on Saturday, July 21, at 7:30 P. M. to elect two members of the board and transact other business. I. Gutzwiller and John Cunningham are the retiring members.

—School district No. 34, Delano received during the last school year the following funds from the county:

|---|---|
| November, 1893 | $ 965.56 |
| March, 1894. | 1518.93 |
| June, 1894, | 1951.85 |
| Total, for the school year, | $4436.34. |

—Work on the waterworks was commenced on Tuesday, by diggihg a hole on the riverbank near Kelsey's saw mill for a reservoir. It is expected that work will continue till the system is completed and in running order. If a stream could be turned on and our streets sprinkled every day, now, it would be a great saving to goods and a pleasure to the people.

--Moses Williams, of this place having learned that a 12 year old son of J. W. Lawrence, of Minneapolis had left the bed and board of the family home and was wanted, badly, by his parents, got a clue that some boy had gone to Montrose a couple of weeks ago, and on Monday went up to see; he soon found the lad, and sent word to his parents who came up on the evening train and took the wanderer home. He was living with an old lady who had given him a lamb and some chickens, and seemed to be enjoying life in the best of shape.

—On Saturday evening River street was treated to a free race between Charley Conzet's saddle horse and a member of the base ball nine. About the time the race was growing interesting "Jumbo" slipped and fell sliding through the dust about as far as he would to make 1st base. The horse shied and the equestrienne also lit in the dust. No serious trouble seems to have come though "Jumbo" limps badly and the rider has some bruises on the head. Charley Conzet says he has been notified by the Chief of Police not to let such fast horses again.

—The arbitration board have finally settled the insurance loss on the school house. The district is to receive $7,051.92. What becomes of the premium on the other $948.08 which the board have been paying, right along and turning in at the school meetings as a part of the assetts of the district. This state should have a law obliging the payment in full of all insurance and, thereby do away with such financiering. We understand the companies offered to build a new house like the old one, for which the district has been paying interest on more than ten thousand dollars for ten years, and for which bonds are still out for more than the house was worth when it burned. And yet, we are told, the board is going to build a better house, with six rooms. We fear, very much, it will turn out like the building of the old one and as soon as it is well under way more bonds will be demanded to finish it with. Treat the matter as if it were your own building gentlemen and build a good one, and not a low, squatty concern.

—Bishop Gilbert will meet those desiring confirmation, at the Presbyterian church to night at 7:30. Rev. Webb is to come on the evening train.

—Regular service at the M. E. church next Sunday at 10:30, A. M.

Business meeting of the Epworth League, regular, on Saturday, at 7 p. m.

Junior League on Sunday at 7 o'clock.

Epworth League at 8 p. m.

County Cullings.

Wright County Republicans are awful mad. The Populists ditto. Them city fellers don't seem to care for country jakes; not a picayune.

The County commissioners met this week and on petition of the towns of Franklin and Rockford rejected the bids for an iron bridge across Crow River; as being too high priced; the lowest bid being for a hundred feet span $3,067.00.

In another place in this paper we publish the call for the Democratic Congressional Convention to meet at St. Cloud, on September 11. It seems to be well understood that Major Baldwin has stood with the democrats while in Congress and deserves an endorseemnt. No other canaidate is mentioned here.

The County Commissioners counted the county cash a few days ago and found on hand and in banks under control of the Treasurer $28,245.29. They estimated county expenses for the next year at $31,150.00. The Auditor was instructed to levy a tax of $20,000.00 for a county Revenue fund. And to meet principal and interest on county bonds a tax of $3,000.00.

We understand that Attorney's Cochran, of Waverly, and Sexton, of Cokoto went down on the Great Northern train to Minneapolis to represent the Wright county populists in the state convention. This was not what the sage Donnelly has been calling for. He has been insisting that the farmers, the people, come themselves in their own wagons. How these two Attorney's coming on the "kars" expect to get any favors for Wright county from "I. D." after such disobedience of his expressed desires we don't know. Why didn't Wright county populists appear in person and not by their Attorney's?

BALDWIN IS HOPEFUL.

He Thinks the Duluth District Is Hopeful Ground for the Democrats.

A friend of Major Balwin has just received a letter from the congressman in which he is exceedingly hopeful over the situation in this district from a democratic standpoint. If the democrats see fit to make him their standard bearer all well and good, but if not he will hustle for whoever is the choice of the party. He expects to come home for a brief stay as soon as the tariff bill is out of the way, which he thinks is not far distant.—Commonwealth.

THAT Pullman was a despot all men have long known; that he is a coward as well is proved by his avoidance of the scenes of carnage he has created. While men struggle desperately in the streets and byways of Chicago, Pullman is enjoying the delights of the sea breezes at the seaside palace, refusing even to listen to the stories of distress that come from Chicago, and mocking all appeals for assistance in settling the dispute. Pullman could have given Nero pointers on the fiddling business.—Globe.

What is Beauty? "Question of a Blind Man.

Replied Aristotle. But Mrs. Sherwood says that it is "dynamite" in her article which opens the interesting pages of the July Cosmopolitan, Beauty is always a fascinating subject, and Mrs. Sherwood's discussion is an especially interesting one. That the July Cosmopolitan is a midsummer number is shown in many directions. Three short stories, including one of sport and adventure, two travel articles, and other light matter, make up 128 pages of charming summer reading.

The July Cosmopolitan markes the close of the first year since the revolutionary announncement was made that the price of that magazine, already low had been cut to one-half of three dollars a year. All sorts of predictions have come to be unfulfilled during the year—it would be impossible to maintain the rate—the quality would be lowered—the size would be decreased. But even severe critics admit that with each succeeding number there has been a betterment in the quality of articles and illustrations, and the seize has remained unchanged, except the always growing advertising pages. The magazine printed, for six months embraced in Volumn XVI one million four hundred and nineteen thousand coppies, an entirely unapproached record, and has doubled its already large plant of presses and binding machinery. The walls of the magazine's new home are rapidly rising at Irvington-on-the-Hudson. Artistically designed by McKim, Mead & White, the new building, with its eight great porticos, will be 279 feet long by 75 feet wide, and one of the most perfectly lighted buildings in the world, having 160 large windows, each nearly double the size of the ordinary window opening.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

INDEPENDENCE, July 4th 1894. MR. EDITOR, by a mathematical problem we find it has been just 118 years since the fathers of of this country declared these colonies should be separate from the British crown free and independent. But are the free institutions long established by our fathers longer held sacred. To-day in every city, village and hamlet will be heard the blast of oritory, eulogizing the men who fought for freedom and bequeathed to us the God given rights we have so long enjoyed. The question arises are we proving true or false to the heritage of our fathers. To a casual observer and a man of ordinary intelligence it would seem we had not been true to these sacred rights.

Just 40 years save one, to-day, your correspondent then a mere lad in company with his parents left Minneapolis, then a small cluster of houses, for what was then called the big woods, from time of starting by ox team transportation, in thirty six hours we landed in this town (Independence) in the midst of a howling wilderness, millions of mosquitoes, deer flies and other things to numerous to mention. But time has wrought marvelous changes since then, by the hand of the hardy pioneer the forrest has been cleared away and to-day instead of a wilderness is fruitful gardens and cultivated fields. In the early settlement of this country, we never even thought of a failure of crops the soil seemed to yield bounteously to the hands of industry and the people seemed content and happy, but since then things seem to go different, sometimes it is too wet or too dry, and sometimes the storms destroy our crops and then we are subject to some of the Egyptian plagues, such as grasshoppers, potato bugs, chinch bugs, and gold bugs; the last mentioned being the most destructive of them all.

At this time we are much in need of rain for the growing crops, wheat and oats can not be more than half a crop at best. Rye and hay will be good, but there will be little or no potatoes unless we get rain soon or high protection makes them grow. If our potato crop fails and they have to be imported here from foreign countries that will be the only time the farmers in this country will know how high protection works on potatoes.

Corn seems to be doing well and the prospect is we will get a fair crop.

Some of our townspeople went to Buffalo to celebrate, but Pickeral point on Lake Independence was the place of rendzavou for the people of Maple Plain and vicinity, it consisted of a picnic, speaking, singing, etc., etc.

"Our fathers in warlike employment,
Determined to conquor or die.
But ours is the peaceful enjoyment,
The fruits of their 4th of July."

Binding Twine.

Henry Wolfer, warden of the penitentiary, at Stillwater has sent out a lot of samples of the prison made binding twine. The twine is of hemp, grown in Minnesota, Iowa and Kentucky, mostly. Mr. Wolfer says:

"This twine will be sold the present season at a price not to exceed 7 cents per pound, and lower, if necessary, to meet competition of any twine of any length and quality that may be placed on the market, said price to be finally determined by the Board of Managers June 1, 1894. All the purchasers of twine previous to that date will be entitled to the benefit of any reductions below seven cents that may be made by the Board. There need, therefor, be no hesitancy in placing orders now, as the prices will be adjusted as above indicated." Farmers who will need twine this fall, if they like the twine, will do well to place their orders in time. Call and get a sample at the GAZETTE office. We have a full ball for examination. 26tf

AND now Vice Pres. Howard from the Chicago jail sends out word that evidence will be produced that two men in the employ of the General Managers Association did the burning of cars in Chicago for $200 down and $300 when done.

THERE languishes in the Chicago jail Eugene V. Debs, Pres. George W. Howard, Vice Pres; Sylvester Keliher, Sec., and T. W. Rogers a Director of the American Railroad Union awaiting trial next Monday, on the charge of contempt for not obeying the injunction issued by Judges Woods and Grosscup.

KEEP OFF THE GRASS is a monthly publication from St Paul and Minneapolis, we are in receipt of No 2 of Vol 1. It claims that the Typographical Union assisted them with an appropriation of $95 to aid in getting out this number. It is run in the interest of the commonwealers, and uses some strong arguments for reform in many particulars.

DURING the last campaign republican papers heaped considerable abuse upon the heads of several eminent men who had for years been members of the G. O. P. but who came out boldly and announced their intention of supporting Grover Cleveland for President, among them was Judge Thomas M. Cooley of Michigan. The Judge is still supporting Cleveland and has written him a letter endorsing his course in preserving order and arranging for a settlement of the present strike; and now Judge Cooley's former calumnators are lauding him to the skies and quoting him far and wide.

THE city dailies claim that the old leaders of the democratic party in this state have concluded that it is poor policy to fuse with the Populists, some of them are making considerable sport at the expense of the old leaders. We are glad to see democracy coming to her senses. Had she for the past few years kept her banner, untarnished, at the front she would now be in better condition than ever before in the state. But when democrats or others, forsake good principles, and honesty of purpose for the express purpose of downing the other party regardless of consequences, with an iconoclastic hand breaking down existing things without placing in their stead better, they themselves are the sufferers. By fusion in the past some of the best men in the democratic party have been placed on mongrel tickets and where they have even succeeded in obtaining the coveted prize, an office, they have been handicapped, and whether or not it was a fact, the rank and file of their own party believed them to be too much under the control of the party with which they fused: their influence among straight democrats has thereby been materially weakened, and their chances today are not so good for office as they were.

Even now in our Judicial district there is talk among a few of a fusion on the opposition ticket to the republican nominees for four District Judges. Who believes four men with sufficient ability to fill the office of Dist Judge who will connive and conspire to defeat a ticket some of which at least is good will be any more honorable when elected, if they chance to be than those they seek to defat? If a party issue is to be made and democracy can't find four men, honorable, honest, learned in the law and imbued with democratic principles enough to say so, let them nominate three, or two, or one; or if they have not one candidate who can command respect let them leave this part of the ticket blank.

Cleveland's Action Endorsed.

Yes, I approve highly of President Cleveland's course in the strike. His prompt action brought the state and city officials, citizens and strikers to their senses, and certainly, so far as he went, he had legal right with him. Mr. Cleveland deserves well of the nation and people of Chicago in particular. It were well indeed for the principles of the republic if city and state authorities were always so prompt and firm in action as to render needless all appeal to the national executive. But talking in a general way, without reference to the city of Chicago or to the state of Illinoise, of the affairs of which I am not fully instructed, the difficulty is that state and city officials are sometimes so solicitous of political interests and party considerations that they fear to offend, and allow social troubles to grow until repression seems impossible. The need of this country is lofty, disinterested patriotism, which for getting all minor allegiances in presence of the general welfare and has leverage to make all sacrifices which may be needed to uphold this welfare.

The proposition of the Catholic church is easily defined. She stands for rights and duties; for labor and for capital, so long as both follow duties and the one allows the right of the other. But always and everywhere, and above all other civil and social interests or considerations, she stands for public justice and social order. She abhors and forbids all approach to lawlessness and anarchy; she commands obedience to law and stern loyalty to the country and to its institutions.—Archbishop Ireland, in P. P.

W. C. T. U. Convention.

[Contributed.]

The eighth annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held in Howard Lake July 11. Delegates to the number of nineteen were present, delegates and visitors representing the villages of Rockford, Buffalo, Waverly and Montrose.

The convention was called to order at 10:30 a. m. Devotional exercises were led by Mrs. J. L. Parker. The president then red her annual address which was thoughtful and suggestive. Reports of secretaries and treasurers were given and committees appointed as follows: Resolution, Mesdame Hoover, Ames and Ferrell; courtesies; Mesdames Parker and Johnson; credentials, Misses Redfield and Crawford.

A discussion and parliamentary drill—the latter by Mrs. Nelson—were pleasant features of the morning session. Noontide prayer was by Mrs. Hoover. Lunch was served in the rear of the church, committee work and social chat making the intermission seem short.

At 2:60 devotionals were led by Mrs. Hellier. The address of welcome by Mrs. Clark and response by Mrs. Perkins were carefully prepared and helpful papers. Reports were then read as follows: Mrs. Bradford's for Monticello, by Miss Redfield; Howard Lake, Mrs. Hooyer; Montrose, Mrs. Ferrell; Rockford, Mrs. Johnson; Mrs. Remington's report of Monticello L. T. L., by Mrs. Moore. Mrs. Stacy's report on press work was read by Mrs. Staples. Rev. Murdock was presented to the convention and spoke briefly but with encouragement for the Unions. Miss Redfield entertained the convention with a solo, which was much admired. Mrs. Nelson's talk to mothers was full of inspiring suggestions. Most members felt drawn towards her for her candid sweetness an plain common sense, well cultivated. Mrs. Stacy's paper on "Woman's Influence" was read acceptably by Mrs. F. H. Johnson. Like all of her papers, it was an inspiration. The symposium, "Franchise a Duty," consisted of a paper by Mrs. Stacy, red by Mrs. Hellier, and papers by Mesdames, Ames, and Hoover. They received good attention and accomplished their purpose by provoking a little discussion in the convention, precipitated by Rev. McCornack and Mrs. Nelson, and more informal discussion during the intermission. Following intermission were the reports on credentials and resolutions. The resolutions encourage the Unions to make a greater effort to profit by the annual convention, urge the prosecution of department work, endorse Judge Black in his efforts to establish an equal standard of purity for the sexes and advocate a county option law which would prevent the minority in a small town from imposing a saloon upon a majority in a county opposed to it.

Thanks to the editors of the country for favors shown, to the county superintendent of press for her labors, and to all who had contributed to the success of the convention, were expressed.

Concerning the necessity for both county and district work, the convention advised simplifying the work but favored the county method.

Officers were then elected as follows:
President—Mrs. A. M. Davis.
Vice-President—Mrs. M. E. Hoover.
Secretary—Miss. Paulina Moor.
Treasurer —Mrs. F. H. Johnson.

Mrs. Stacy was reappointed superintendent of press work and Mrs. Hoover was appointed committee on publication for the convention. The address by Mrs. Nelson in the evening was much enjoyed, also music by the choir and generous freewill offering.

Delegates and friends pronounce this one of the best of Wright county Union conventions.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, D. C., July 13, 1894.

President Cleveland and his cabinet are almost swamped with telegrams from every section of the country congratulating them on the courage and promptness with which they have brought ordor out of chaos and prevented what at one time looked like revolution, and volunteering aid to any imaginable extent, in both men and money. The President and his advisers believe that the worst is over, but they none the less feel proud of the confidence reposed in them by congress and the people and will continue their efforts to deserve that confidence.

It is Speaker Richardson now, if you please, Representative Richardson, of Tenn., having been elected Speaker pro. tem. of the house during the absence of Speaker Crisp, who has been called to Georgia by the serious illness of his brother.

The democrats of the tariff conference committee have held daily meetings this week and the air is full of rumors each contradictory of the other as to what they have done. These rumors are nothing more than guesses as members of the conference will have nothing to say until they report to their respective Houses.

Had the situation not been entirely too grave and important to be laughed at the silly talk of Messrs Hayes, McGuire and French, members of the Executive committee of the Knights of Labor, who are in Washington this week, and beginning impeachment proceedings against Attorney General Olney because of the arrest of Debs, would be regarded as a good joke. As it is it only mearly gave the intelligent public an opportunity to gauge the caliber of the men who control a once powerful and influential organization and to wonder how they ever managed to get their authority of how long the organization can stand the use they are makeing of it.

Senator Daniel, of Virgina, in addition to being a State's rights democrat of the staunchest sort is known among lawyers as an authority upon Constitutional law. His resolution (offered as a substitute to the semi-anarchist resolution offered by Senator Peffer of Kans., and supported by the populist Senator in one of the most outrageous speeches ever made in the Senate in which the abolition of Congress and the transfer of authority to a committee composed of the member of each state was advocated), endorsing President Cleveland and his administration for the prompt and vigorous measures taken "to repulse and repress by military force the interference of lawless men with the due process of the laws of the U. S., and with commerce among the States" and declaring that "the action of the President and his administration has the full sympathy and support by all departments of the government and by the power and resources of the entire nation," would have been immediately adopted by a nearly unanimous vote of the Senate as it was the next day—only Peffer voting against it—had not Senator Gallinger, of N. H., for some unexplained reason caused it to go over a day under the rules by objecting to a vote thereon refusing to withdraw the objection although he was begged to do so by his repnblican colleagues. Speaking of the situation Senator Daniel said: "I am a States rights democrat, and would be the last man to stand idly by and see the authority of the state encroached upon, but I fail to see anything here that encroaches upon the authority of the State of Illinois in any way. The President is acting entirely within the lines of the constitution, and his action is to be commended by all law abiding citizens, regardless of their political predication or partisan feeling."

This is the way the situation looks to Senator Davis, of Minn., the Republican whose raking down of Peffer will not soon be forgotten: "I have looked into this matter as a lawyer, and my judgment is that the President has gone about his business as a lawyer. He has considered his ground become acquainted with his authority and powers, and then gone in to exercise them in a righteous cause and for the good of the general public. He hasn't exceeded his authority one whit; on the contrary, he has not yet exhausted it. If the federal troops are not sufficient for this emergency the state militia is at his command. The President can swear the militia of the various states into the service of the U. S., and then send them to Chicago or any other point where their mobilization may become necessary. The constitution is broad enough in this case, and the President is entrenched upon it."

CORRESPONENCE

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

INDEPENDENCE, July 10th 1894.

MR. EDITOR:—Greece had her Demosthenes, Egypt her Pharo's, France her Napoleon, but America greater than them all with her demoralization in business, her railroad strikes, and her Coxeyites, who dare dispute we stand not at the head of nations. Are we not following in the wake of all other Republics that came to naught? Where is the pride of our boasted liberty and free institutions of more than a century ago? Where are they? Echo answers where? The commmon people of this country are asking themselves what is wrong with us as a nation? The trouble is we have bowed the knee to Baal too much; and the medicine is making us sick. Who is there among us thats on the Lord's side. Only thirty years ago we were engaged in a civil war that wasted our treasury and deluged our country with blood. Have we got to have a repetition of the same thing over again? May kind providence direct it otherwise. The soldier and the common people at home congratulated themselves when the civil war was ended and we once more had peace. But wars are always demoralizing to any nation and we being one are no exception to the rule, ours left us in an unstable condition. During the war men became avaricious; the love of money making became their God. Where is the constitution of the United States that the people of this country once regarded as sacred as did the children of Israel did the ark of the covenent? It has become only a second consideration. This country can not be run on strictly party principles neither will a single gold standard or a high protective tariff save us financially, but the platform on which we rest must be clean and broad, that will guarantee equal rights to all and special priviliges to none. We never did believe much in strikes; think it is only one time in ten they are justifiable, they generally bring about an unhealthy state of affairs, but too often the poor man is ground down to starvation wages and he thinks this the only way in which he can recover. Too many men that for years have been looking more to their own interest at the head ofour government have been of their country, but Mr. Editor to most of us this is no new thing and the only thing we can do is to face the music.

How is this that the State Prison board have decided to sell the State Prison binding twine to farmers only in car lots 20,000 lb. The farmer is the life, the soul, the foundation, the ajax, the everything that makes a nation and a people, so they bleed him first, last, and all the time. It seems they think farmers have no rights that other people are bound to respect. Then there is the Threshermens combine. I suppose this is for the benefit of the farmer too. In fact the farmer is made the ragend and bobtail of almost everything under the sun. The most industrious people we have are congressmen and farmers and they must revolutionize the world and bring out a reform. We are living in a fast age. Men are becoming haughty high minded lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; and to a person well versed in the scriptures the present condition of things is not surprising. It does not look much like the coming of a millennium. O for a lodge in some vast wilderness.

Our Country and our Neighbors.

This beautiful publication by John L. Stoddard, the famous American traveler and lecturer, is now issued in 16 parts, each part containing 16 magnificent half tone engravings 8 by 11 inches in size, from photographs of notable structures, busy street scenes, and wonderful views of Nature's architecture in the Americas. The Great Northern Railway has secured an edition of this art work from the publishers, and will furnish it to friends and patrons at the mere cost of handling. The parts will be delivered weekly at ten cents each, and purchasers can have the privilege of buying a copy of Graham's celebrated steel plate view of Niagra Falls at one-tenth the regular retail price of that famous production. Agent Geo. Bolton has a framed copy of the Niagara picture hanging in the depot, and also has a supply of Part 1 of "Our Country", and he asks everybody to call at this office and see them. There is certainly nothing more instructive than to read a graphic description of some noted building, monument, street, city, cataract or mountain, particularly when the scene is pictured as faithfully and grandly as sun and art can do it. This work is an art treasury, and only needs to be seen to be appreciated. Every patriotic citizen is strengthened in his admiration and love of country by a persual of this book.. 42 tf.

When You Visit the Sick.

Always when visiting a sick person endeavor to sit where the invalid may see you without making an effort to do so. Under any circumstances it is always more satisfactory to see the person to whom one is talking; and nothing is more fatiguing to an invalid than to be obliged to twist into an uncomfortable position in order to see the visitor. The good effect of the most cheery talk will be nullified by the fatigue of the effort. And don't speak of depressing subjects: above all, refrain from talking of similar cases that you have known or heard of, unless by doing so you can make the sufferer more hopeful. Tell all the bright, cheery things you can, retail pleasant bits of news; but don't stay to long, even though urged to remain. —From "Sanitarian;" Demorest's Magazine for August.

LATER NEWS

Debs in Jail.

CHICAGO, July 17.—Eugene V. Debs, George W. Howard, L. W. Rogers and Sylvester Keliher, the officers of the American Railway Union, were committed to jail today by Judge Seaman, in the United States circuit court, for alleged violation of the injunction issued by Judges Woods and Grosscup. The four leaders of the strike in reality went to jail in default of bail, for the court offered them their liberty until next Monday, when they will have a hearing on the charge of contempt. Their bail was fixed at $3,000 each, but the men refused to give it, and the court committed them. Debs and his companions were taken to the jail by Marshal Arnold, and before they left the court room Judge Seaman instructed the marshal to take them out of jail at any reasonable time or times, in order that they may have abundant oppertunity to consult their attorneys between this and next Monday.

An Explosion.

HAZELTON, Pa., July 18.—Two hundred sticks of giant powder exploded in the midst of a gang of miners at Stockton colliery No. 8 yesterday, and not enough of the men's bodies was left for identification.

On account of the distance of the Stockton colliery from the main breaker, it has been customary to send the dynamite and other explosives in boxes to No. 8 and distribute them to the workmen at the bottom of the second shaft as they appear in the morning on their way to work. It was Charles O'Donnell's duty to distribute the dynamite and caps. The first men to go down into the shaft yesterday were the drivers, and these were the only ones to return alive from the opening. The drivers were at the stable harnessing when the explosion occurred. Eight are known to have been killed.

THE INDUSTRIAL WAR.

Some of the Events Incident to the Great Pullman Boycott.

Ominous Turn of Affairs in California—The Allied Trades Fail to Go Out—Outlook Brightens for Chicago and Other Centers.

TO PROBE THE STRIKE.

WASHINGTON, July 14.—It was officially announced at the white house Thursday night that the president will appoint a commission by the authority given him by the arbitration act of 1888, to investigate the labor troubles at Chicago and elsewhere, and report to the president and congress. This determination on the part of the president was arrived at after an interview with Secretary-Treasurer Hayes, of the Knights of Labor, McGuire and C. N. French, of the executive committee, and Mr. Schoenfaber, who were introduced to the president Thursday afternoon by Senator Kyle and who came bearing credentials from the American Railway union, the Pullman employes and several labor organizations.

Riots at Oakland.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 14. — Early Thursday morning a mob of several hundred strikers rushed into the yards on the mole. They killed all the locomotives that had been fired up, and blockaded the tracks by derailing a locomotive and a long line of coaches. Later in the day another crowd wrecked a turntable and did some damage a the roundhouse. Trouble came to an end, however, in the evening when a force of marines from Mare island were landed.

Refuse to Treat.

CHICAGO, July 16.—The General Managers association refused to even consider the peaceful overtures which were made to that body by President Eugene V. Debs of the American Railway union. The proposition was not only not considered, but it was returned to Mayor Hopkins, who took the letter to the association, with the information that no communication whatever from the officers of the American Railway union could be received or considered by the association.

At 10:30 a. m. Friday President Debs and Vice President Howard, of the American Railway union, called on Mayor Hopkins and presented him with a document containing a proposal for a settlement of the strike which they asked him to hand to the General Managers' association and use his influence to have that organization indorse it. The plan proposed agreed that the strike would be declared off if the railway companies will take back the old men, except those who were arrested and those who have committed acts of violence.

Will Remain at Work.

CHICAGO, July 16.—The executive committee of the American Federation of Labor and the representatives of the national organizations which have been meeting at the Briggs house for the last two days on Friday decided against ordering a general strike in support of the American Railway union. The conference also decided against local sympathetic strikes by the trade unions, and requested the members of the organizations already out to return to their places. There was but one expression of opinion among delegates as to the justice of the strike of the American Railway union, but there was pronounced opposition to involving other trades of the country.

Wrecked by Miners.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., July 16.—The miners, of Fontanet, a station on the Big Four a few miles west of Terre Haute, on Friday, ditched a train. The engineer and fireman were mangled to death.

The wreck was undoubtedly the work of a lawless mob of miners that possessed Fontanet all day Thursday and stopped and sidetracked five Big Four freight trains to show their sympathy for the railroad strikers. The trouble was so threatening that Sheriff Stout, of Vigo county, and several deputies went to Fontanet Thursday afternoon. No passengers were seriously injured.

Under Martial Law.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., July 16.—Friday was one of the most exciting days in the history of the strike, and martial law has been proclaimed. Two men lie wounded in the receiving hospital, while several others are reported dead or injured. Shortly after 10 o'clock Friday morning a switch engine was proceeding along Front street to clear the track. A company of regulars, under Capt. Roberts, of Battery L, Fifth United States artillery, accompanied the engine. As it reached I street it is said a gang of strikers fired on the troops. The soldiers returned the fire and several men were seen to fall. Two of them were picked up by the police and removed to the receiving hospital.

United States Marshal Baldwin was at the head of the troops and proclaimed martial law. He called upon the people in the name of the United States to go to their homes and remain there until the trouble is over. A few obeyed but the majority remained on the streets in defiance of the marshal's order.

A Brighter Outlook.

CHICAGO, July 17.—Railway managers declared Sunday that the strike was a thing of the past. They claim to have many of their old men back at work and are rapidly supplying the places of others. Trains are running with something of old-time regularity. Freight is being moved but the congestion is not ended. Trades' union men called out to support the strike have mostly resumed work. Uncle Sam's troops are still encamped on the lake front.

Telegrams from other railroad centers are more emphatic than ever before to the effect that the American Railway union strike is at an end outside Chicago. From Detroit, Toledo, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, and other points the news is much to the same effect—that most of the railroads are running freight and passenger trains on schedule time, that men who deserted their posts at the order to strike are applicants for reemployment; that new men are plentiful enough to supply the needs of the railway managers and that some of the roads emphatically refuse to reinstate former employes who deserted at the dictates of the union.

Managers Quit.

Saturday the General Managers' association adjourned sine die. Recognizing that the railroad strike was virtually ended, the members felt that there was no further need for their daily meetings.

Before the meeting Chairman St. John and Strike Manager Egan both reiterated the statement that the General Managers' association would not recognize Mr. Debs or any of his associates in the settlement of the strike. It was also said emphatically that none of the old brotherhoods was involved in the settlement of the strike.

Leaders Confer.

At a conference held at the Revere house on Saturday, at which President Debs, Vice President Howard, Secretary Keliher and Director Rogers, of the American Railway union, General Master Workman Sovereign, of the Knight of Labor, and Grand Chief Stephenson and Secretary Rodemos, of the National Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, were present, it was agreed that the Knights of Labor in Chicago and other points in the west where there is trouble with the railroads will be called out. Knights of Labor at other places will remain at work and will contribute their moral and financial support to the strikers. When the meeting had adjourned it was announced that the leaders, in addition to ordering a strike of some Knights of Labor, had decided to call out all carmen and trackmen; to appoint a number of additional managers of the strike; to appeal to Chief Arthur to forbid members of the Engineers' brotherhood working with non-union men, and to push the strike and boycott more vigorously than ever.

Took an Oath of Fealty.

Richard Powers stood before 2,500 persons at Bricklayers' hall Sunday night and bound the assembly by a solemn oath to renounce the two old political parties and espouse the cause of the people's party. The scene was dramatic in the extreme. The speaker had just finished an arraignment of the two political machines, which he blamed for the present depressed condition of the country. Then he told the assemblage to repeat the oath after him.

"With my hand uplifted"—the multitude roared the sentence—"and before the everlasting God!" The audience repeated after the speaker, and the noise had scarcely ended before he continued: "I renounce all parties—" The rest was drowned in the shouting. Every hand in the hall was held high and the rest of the oath was lost in the noise. It was an indorsement of the people's party.

At this same meeting resolutions were adopted hailing with joy the action of the trades union, the farmers' alliance, the single-taxers, the socialists and populists in joining hands in a common effort to restore the liberties of the people by means of the ballot; renouncing unconditionally allegiance to either the democratic or republican party; declaring in future as trade unionists, socialists, federationists, single-taxers and all other elements outside the old party machines, for independent political action, and that to make a straight fight in accordance with this resolution they would rally under the banner of the people's party.

Refuse to Yield.

The Pullman strikers were given the opportunity Monday night to go back to work. No conditions were attached. They declined to accept the invitation. Col. Turner and Dr. H. W. Thomas acted as peacemakers. During the day placards were stuck up around town calling for a mass meeting at 8 o'clock in the New Market hall. More than 1,000 men and women attended. To the advice of Col. Turner and Dr. Thomas to return to work a unanimous shout of "Never" was returned, and the object of the meeting proved fruitless. During the day negotiations looking to the opening of the works and the reemployment of the old men were conducted between Messrs. Turner and Thomas and Vice President Wickes. The latter agreed that if the men stated their willingness and desire to return to work the company would consider the proposition.

Trains Moving in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 17.—All trains are moving approximately on schedule time. The west bound overland train, which has been tied up at Ogden, arrived at Sacramento Sunday with a number of passengers.

The House Endorses President Cleveland's Strike Policy.

WASHINGTON, July 18. — President Cleveland's course in the recent strike was indorsed in the house in the following language:

Resolved, That the house of representatives indorses the prompt and vigorous efforts of the president and his administration to suppress all lawlessness, restore order and prevent improper interference with the enforcement of the laws of the United States and with the transportation of the mails of the United States and with interstate commerce; and pledges the president hearty support, and deems that the success which has already attended his efforts is cause for public and general congratulations."

The resolution was offered by Congressman McCreary, chairman of the foreign affairs committee. The resolution was adopted by a viva voce vote.

Umbrella Trust Failure.

NEW YORK, July 17.—The umbrella company which has been known as the $8,000,000 umbrella trust has been placed in the hands of receivers by Judge Gildersleeve. The debts of the company are about $1,200,000, apart from contingent liabilities on losses and contracts, but do not exceed $200,000 outside the $1,000,000 of debenture stock. The assests are said to amount to $600,000 on a conservative valuation.

Lynched.

RUSSELLVILLE, Ky., July 17.—The body of Edwin Traughber was found hanging to a limb in a thicket near Adairville. Sunday night masked men went to his home at Adairville and after calling him out tied his hands and feet and carried him to a thicket near G. W. Hunt's farm several miles distant and hanged him. The cause of the lynching is not known.

Found the Stolen Treasure.

BUTTE, Mont., July 17.—Friday the station agent at Wickes, a mining camp on the Montana Central railway was robbed of a chest containing $2,800 in gold coin. The sheriff and a posse started out to run down the thieves. While scouring around the mountains one of the posse stepped on the ground which sagged, and underneath the sod the strong box was found intact and all the money recovered.

A number of grain growers of the Northwest met at Minneapolis and organized a Grain Growers' association, which will be legally incorporated at an early date. It was decided to boycott the threshermen's trust and take steps to release the farmers from the oppressions of the railroad companies. The meeting was called at the instance of Ignatius Donnelly and A. H. Hendrickson, respectively the president and secretary of the Farmers' alliance.

W. J. Bodkin, of Moorhead, was elected president.

The foliowing are vice presidents.

A. C. Long, at large; Thomas J. Meignen, First; Eric Olson, Second; H. V. Poor, Third; S. W. Powell, Fourth and Fifth; Kittel Halvorson, Sixth, and R. J. Hall, Seventh. It was decided to leave the matter of raising revenue to the executive board, as well as the location of the general office, which, however, will be at Minneapolis or Duluth, and probably in this city.

H. V. Poor resigned from the list of vice presidents in favor of Soren Morton.

The object of the association is stated in the call, viz.: "We do not expect to put up the price of wheat to two dollars a bushel, or even to one dollar a bushel, but to get as much out of it as the world's market will justify; and to get clear of as many middlemen as possible."

An Explosion.

A terrific explosion in Haley & Hoy's saloon at 219 Hennepin avenue, Minneapolis, dangerously injured four men, wrecked the whole front of the building, tore the interior to pieces, shattered the large plate glass windows in the Hennepin County Savings bank adjoining, broke numerous windows in the vicinity and slightly hurt several people in the street. The injured are:

Joseph Hoy, bruised, scorched and hurt internally; Al Childs, from West Superior, face and hands frightfully scorched and blistered, with numerous contusions about the body; James Shannon, burned about the body, severely bruised in the chest and injured internally; Robert Salters, a railroad man, hand cut with glass.

Bogus Mortgages.

It is leaaned that D. Titus, of Moorhead, has forged a number of mortgages on property in that city, securing in the neighborhood of $25,000 in this manner. One is on the residence of H. Hawley, another on W. B. Douglas and wife for $1,200, and there are a number ranging from $150 to $2,000. He was until lately vice-president of the First National bank, secretary of the school board and justice of the peace until the late spring election, and has been a prominent citizen and church member. He made loans for two or three eastern parties, one of whom is a relative, Mrs. Gray.

Highwayman Style.

W. J. Hurd, well known in St. Paul as the "King Bee" dentist, was arrested upon a serious charge. About 12 o'clock at night, at the point of a revolver, he stopped a hack containing his wife, another lady and two gentlemen. When the quartet tried to escape he followed, firing five shots at them, none of which took effect.

Overtaking his wife he is said to have struck her several times in the face and fired at her once as she lay prostrate upon the pavement. Her injuries, while painful, were not so serious as to require a physician's attention.

The Coal Combine.

There was another echo of the coal combine investigation in the supreme court when the case of John J. Rhodes, appellant, vs. Richard A. Walsh, et al., respondent, was argued and submitted. This is on the appeal from the order of Judge Otis setting aside the finding of the referee allowing Rhodes $1,350 damages against the members of the legislative investigating committee which took the books of Rhodes, who was the manager of the combine, from his office without his consent and, it was alleged, without due process of law.

Gold.

A carload of gold quartz has been shipped to Kansas City from the banks of the Minnesota river near Delhi, to be crushed and converted into bullion. Geologist Edlund, of Minneapolis, has a force of men at work getting out gold quartz. He is highly pleased with the outlook, as there is any quantity of quartz along the river. More men will be put to work at once.

News in Brief.

An attempt was made to lynch the murderer of policeman Jacobson at Hastings, without success, the jail being guarded by 40 or more deputies.

Fire destroyed the big barn of Geo. H. Fifield, near Winona, together with several hundred tons of hay, 650 bushels of barley and a number of farm implements.

Paddy Brennan, 16 years old, while leading one of the Brennan Lumber company's horses to water at Hinckley, was kicked in the face and his skull fractured. His recovery is doubtful.

While temporarily insane, P. J. Wheaton made a desperate attempt at suicide at the county jail at Minneapolis by plunging a knife into his body in the vicinity of his heart. Wheaton came to Minneapolis from Bismarck, N. D., where he is principal of the public schools. He had been placed in jail on account of insanity symptoms.

Two boys found a badly decayed skeleton at the east end of Winona while fishing. The bones were brought to light by a caving bank. In the skull were three teeth, one of which was gold filled.

The national convention of the Retail Clerk's Protective Association of America held its annual session at the state capitol at St. Paul.

The Hubbard County Game and Fish club has sworn out six warrants for illegal fishing, has secured the conviction of five men, destroyed 1,200 feet of gill nets, 400 feet of draw seine, and twelve fish boxes, and has driven nine fishing gangs from the county.

TRANSATLANTIC LINERS.

TISSUS microbicides, warranted to keep out the most persevering bacillus, are being sold by some of the chief Parisian shops.

NORTH LONDON is to have a Toynbee hall—the gift of Passmore Edwards. It will be situated in Somers Town—a miserably poor district.

ALUMINUM drums are proving most successful in the Prussian military bands. Not only are they lighter than the ordinary kind, but they give out a much fuller and richer sound.

THE advertisement fiend is now desecrating Indian scenery. A European firm has rented the side of a cliff at Sima, the favorite bill station, and intends to put up an advertisement "which will form a pleasing contrast to the color of the rock."

THE London cab strike would not have lasted so long if the English authorities were of the same temper as their brethren in St. Petersburg. A Russian jehu who demands more than his legal fare and becomes abusive gets six days' imprisonment.

THE excitement of a whale hunt can be enjoyed in British waters without going even so far as Norway. A tremendous school of whales came into Kirkwall bay, Orkney, the other day, causing a most spirited chase, while over one hundred were captured the same afternoon at Westray, a little further north in the islands. The whales were of the porpoise species and about seven feet long.

THE FOOTLIGHTS.

M. ANTOINE, of the Theater Libre, in Paris, is to take his whole company to Berlin, where he will give a series of performances in the Residenz theater.

ROB ROY, a comic opera by Smith and De Koven, will be produced by F. C. Whitney in October. The company which he is organizing will be headed by Helen Betram.

MELBA made her reappearance at La Scala, Milan, on a recent Sunday evening in Lucia di Lammermoor, and scored a triumph in the presence of a distinguished audience, including the queen of Italy.

THE old burlesque of Little Jack Sheppard is to be revived at the London Gaiety theater, and Ellaline Terriss is to play the title part. Seymour Hicks will be "Jonathan Wild" and Charles Danby "Blueskin."

A Modern Convenience.

On the Fourth of March, 1839, an enterprising Yankee left Boston for New York, carrying a carpet bag of most goodly dimensions. The man was William F. Harnden, and his carpet bag apparently contained only a few packages of money and valuable papers consigned to New York merchants. It had occurred to Harnden that by saving business men the expense of a special messenger for the transfer of each individual's packages, a paying occupation might be worked up for himself. The idea was so novel, however, that it took a long time for that generation to patronize the new way. Perhaps Harnden thought the load was light, but now we can see that it contained not only the few packages on his memorandum, but the whole vast express system of to-day, employing an army of men, transporting millions of money and thousands of tons of various merchandise, and also doing a banking business through their money orders. What would our life be now, had we to return to special messenger, or the unpaid service of some neighbor on his travels? Can we not justly call the express system a modern convenience? The development of Harnden's idea is astounding. And yet we must recognize that without the anterior building of railroads—such as the Burlington system, linking to each other and the commercial world hundreds of towns and cities, of the great and popular western States,—the scheme would have remained but little more comprehensive than when first devised. It is not for us to advise what express company is preferable, but when it comes to a railroad, you can never miss it by insisting that the ticket agent must sell you a ticket by the Burlington route to any of the larger cities, and towns of the country, or you can write to W. J. C. KENYON, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

"DOS'T you consider Miss Bonby rather dull?" said one society man. "Well," replied the other, "after the manner in which she cut you this morning I can't say that I do."—Washington Star.

First—We reaffirm the great principles set forth in the platform of the National People's party adopted at Omaha July 4, 1892, to-wit:

(a) We demand a national currency, safe, sound and flexible, a full legal tender for all debts, public and private, not less than $50 per capita, issued by the general government only direct to the people by payments in discharge of all its obligations and for public improvements.
